Recently a supply of war surplus charcoal named Whetlerite found its way into Michigan to be used for poultry mashes reports Dr. C. F. Clark, State Veterinarian and W. C. Geagley, State Chemist, both of the Michigan Departient of Agriculture.

A few instances were found where this was used in poultry mashes and wherever used the poisonous content is such that losses, when it was feld, were heavy. This product was made for gas masks during the war and the charcoal contains copper in poisonous amounts for livestock.

Warning has been sent out cuttioning anyone who is mixing tends and using any form of charcoal, to be sure to check carofully to see
