Hears Talk On ArtMiss Alma Goetsch, Professor of Art at Michigan State College, spoke before the Farmington PTA at their annual Founders' Day dinner, February 21.Miss Goetsch discussed the place of art in the school curriculum and its place in the student's life. In the course of her informal talk she made several suggestions to parents to aid them in planning for their children.She suggested that the parent be sensitive to what the child does in art, music or the other fine arts.
The young child, she said, begins a study of art by just scribbling. It is good for him because he is exercising and learning to control his muscles.At a slightly more advanced stage the child begins to attach meaning to these scribbles. It is important at this time that the parent does not say, "That is a funny looking horse!" It is much better if the parent or teacher says, "Tell me about your drawing!" Something on the paper that looks entirely wrong, she said, may be perfectly right if the parent knows the child's reasoning."Art should come from within," Miss Goetsch said, "it is no longer necessary, as in the past, that art be a recording instrument. Photography has replaced it in this field."She suggested that the parent encourage the child to draw or participate in one of the other fine arts. She suggested that the parent provide materials for this activity, and also a nook or cranny where the child can be by himself.
The child is hampered if his uncle or other person looks over his shoulder and says, "That's a funny looking house." The location and materials should be easy to clean up. It should be considered a natural part of the cycle that the child clean up any mess.Miss Goetsch stressed that the parent should be careful not to set up adult standards for the children.
The arts have the power of increased sensitivity for the child and should be encouraged. The person that can appreciate the smells of the woods, the texture of the flowers, and nature, has much cause for enjoyment in this pushbutton existence of today, she said.
Tolerance, and a zest for experimentation during leisure time can be enhanced through the arts. All children are creative. Statements such as "That doesn't look like a horse," tend to kill this creativity and individuality.Miss Goetsch described Art as follows: "It is a probing for inner thoughts of human being put into materials."Miss Goetsch's appearance on the program was preceded by an appearance of a barber shop quartet of high school students and piano solos by Tom and Loren Clifford.
Rev. Carl Schultz of the Evangelical and Reformed Church acted as toastmaster. His address was in keeping with the occasion of PTA Founders' Day. Mrs. C. E.
Downing was chairman of the dinner, at which 110 persons were in attendance.M Union Opera Booked rightly: "How does it happen you got even Republicans made speeches

The senate passed the oleo bill

Three extra Republicans looking for fresh ammunition to attack Truman's policy on Formosa, showed up at the closed-door session of the senate foreign relations committee. However, they went away empty-handed. The GOP bat-out like a hoarse Hallowe'en horn

Chief of Staff Bradley, Wisconing to relieve the tension by pointing to a badge on his lapel with the mean?" he asked the secretary of defense.

Johnson shook his head, so Wiley boomed hilariously: "They stand for tired tax payer, and I sure am one."Johnson then read a 10-minute opening statement, after which the senators began machine-gunning.
