SEA LAMPREY DANGER APPEARS

IN INLAND LAKES

Secent figures supplied, the U. S. Dispartment of Agriculture by the Michigan State Poultry Im-programent Association show con-citatively into Michigan hatcher-iegiare vinning their battle to gradicate pullorum disease in poultry. The sea lamprey, which for sev-eral years has ravaged fish popu-lations in the Great Lakes and now may become established in some of Micbigars inland lakes, has one of the strangest life his-tories of living organisms. Unlike most living things which grow at a rather even rate until maturity, the lamper remains small during most of its life and only during the last portion does it grow to maturity. Egg. quality drops rapidly if the eggs are not cooled soon after they are laid.

It grow to maturity. The first four years of its six-year life after hatching from an egg are speat buried in sit beds in swamps and along streams, where it feeds on plant life and small organisms. During those four years, the lamprey grows to a length of only four or five inch-es. At the end of the fourth year, the lamprey leaves its silt-bed home for the first time and travels downstream to some larger body of melor.

After spraying pastures for pois n the onous weeds, it's best to keep the cattle out until after the weeds have decomposed.
