in order. But when congress meets this campaign will be over. An informal check at FCC indicates a more immediate way might be found around the obstacle.

There are already a number of nationally televised, nationally sponsored programs which appear in a checklist this type of matching facts, wits and grasp of the issues. Nearly all senators and many congressmen have participated.

While the standard 30-minute time often runs out before issues have been adequately clarified, a series of hour-long discussions, running over perhaps six weeks, could be conducted with complete fairness.

It would be hard to imagine that the managers of any of these programs would object to finding themselves suddenly with two such distinguished participants. A rescheduling putting two such 30-minute pieces end-to-end, to provide the full hour, should not be insupportable. It would of course be a windfall for the sponsors of the programs, who, under this system, would pick up the check, but no larger a check than they would have to pay for the date set for the said hearing.

The nation has never forgotten the Lincoln - Douglas debates. While in proportion four could bear them. In the television age, we all could look in. An Eisenhower - Stevenson series of radio-TV debates could be the deciding factor November 4.

Mark Black Bear For Future Study

For the first time in Michigan, a black bear was live-trapped, skinned with ether, then tagged, marked and released.

The animal, a 115-pound yearling, was captured on the conservation department's Cusno wildlife experiment station near Shingleton.

The trap was fashioned from a section of steel road culvert. Two pounds of ether were injected, after the trap was made airtight. When subdued, the animal's ear was tagged and two claws were snipped, so its movements and habits can be traced by tracks.

Department personnel say never before in Michigan has a bear been tagged and released for study purposes.
