Looking Ahead

years he's been general traffic manager for Sears Roebuck and Company. His job with the new Post Office Department team is assistant postmaster general in charge of transportation.

"We haven't filled all the key jobs," said Hook. "We're proceeding carefully, not being satisfied with less than the best in ability and character and heart. Meanwhile we're approaching the overall job here as a business problem. We're doing an organizational study, starting at the top. Our first objective is to raise the standard of management. The overwhelming majority of employees of the department are loyal, efficient, dedicated people. With a sound management organization and sound business practices throughout the whole operation, the postal service employees will do the job more efficiently, more happily, we feel, and with substantial savings in cost."

"And eliminate the year-after-year deficit?" "We feel confident," said Hook, "that the deficit can be reduced and at the same time the service improved. But in this objective we're dependent on the cooperation of Congress. Congress sets the postal rates, through its income. It determines our basic costs by setting our wage rates for postal employees. We've been getting fine cooperation. As a result of our initial studies, we hope to raise the qualification standards for postmasters and other classifications of personnel, and while this may step on some political toes, we believe the Civil Service Commission and our governing Congressional Committees will be in accord, and that's a big step toward improved efficiency."

What happens in the Post Office Department under business management will be worth watching. At this stage it promises both efficiency and economy.

Trout Plantings Planned For Northern Streams

First trout plantings in the March - April planting schedule have been released in northern streams, the conservation department reports.

Coons Lead 'Dog's Life' In Michigan Woods

Hounds, hunters and predators are not the only hazards a racoon faces in his lifetime.

Recently, one coon, who lived high up in a hollow tree near Sayre, Michigan, found the home front quite as deadly a problem. The poor coon, apparently while trying to enter his den, was trapped and killed when wind toppled the tree top down around his ears.
