steady invasion of the states by the federal government, accomplished first by seizing sources of taxation traditionally held by the states and local communities, then by handing back part of the money in grants-in-aid. The effect," he said, "is substantial to put the states on a federal dole with resultant steady loss of sovereignty." The Council contends that federal economy must begin at home.

Its formal objectives are: (1) To encourage more responsibility and self-reliance in local communities and the states; (2) To check the tide toward centralization of power in the federal government; (3) To reduce pressure upon Congress exerted by communities to obtain Federal aid for local improvement projects; and (4) To urge greater economy in government spending. In his announced policies and in recommending creation of a commission to study the federal-state-local vision of tax sources and responsibilities, President Eisenhower recognizes the problem. Its root cause can only be removed, however, by a rebirth of the great American spirit of self-reliance—from the grass-roots up!

State Restricts Use Of Fishing Baits

Fishermen who wish to make use of southern Michigan trout ponds are restricted to the use of "artificial flies only" as bait, a conservation commission order states.

This order excludes all baits, flies or otherwise, that have spinners or spoons attached. Bluegill flies and streamers may be used. Also, single-hook corked bass flies are permissible, but not the heavier bass plugs.

Gross freight revenue received by railroads from shipments of bituminous coal amounts to more than one billion dollars a year.
