SLOPE OF LAND MUST BE CONSIDERED WHEN SELECTING TYPE OF LAWN SEED

Just any type of grass will not do for your lawn. You will need to consider any slope present as well as conditions of sun and shade.

For a level or gently sloping lawn in open sun, Kentucky blue grass is recommended. For sandy soil with a slightly acid condition, the usual lawn is made up of a combination of hairy red top and New Zealand red fescue.

However, there are so many grasses and so many different mixtures that it would be desirable to get some advice from your local seed dealer as to which best suits your special conditions.

If your soil is poorly drained, some of the meadow grasses like red top meadow fescue and the like would be very useful. If your lawn is dry and overly drained, you might use the New Zealand red fescue or some of the creeping grasses.

For a lawn partly in shade, the usual best consists of either meadow fescue grass or Cheviot's New Zealand red fescue grass.

On a sloping bank it is best to use special grasses which bind the soil and prevent erosion. Several kinds of creeping bent grass might be desirable here.

One of the principal problems in seeding on a slope is to keep the slope from washing away while the seed is starting. You can use a temporary, rapidly germinating grass which will grow fast and hold the soil while the permanent grasses are slowly developing. Most commonly used is perennial fescue grass. However, it is good for only a few years, until the permanent grasses take over. If the slope is high and a large quantity of water rushes down, half the seed should be common oats or rye.

Water new grass with a fine mist spray every day until it comes up to a height of an inch or so. After that, once a week may be enough. Do not cut a new lawn until it is four or five inches high. Set the mower to leave two or three inches of grass below.

Weeds are bound to appear. There is only one thing to do — pull them up! Do not use weed sprays on tender young seedlings. When the grass is well established, anti-weed sprays can be used.

For purposes of economy in dealing with a large area, you can have two kinds of lawn. First,

BON JOUR, SOLDAT—A pretty smile from the pretty wife of American Gen. Matthew Ridgway cheers up a wounded French soldier, Private Andre Batifol. Mrs. Ridgway is seen above at the Military Hospital Val de Grace in Paris. She is holding a mirror so that the wounded man may examine his beard which has grown since he was injured while fighting Communists in the French colony of Indo-China.
