State Expects 20 - 30 Deaths In Hunt Saseons

Twenty to thirty persons out moving around in Michigan these days are going to meet violent, gunfire death within the next two gunfire death within the next two months — unless there's an un-precedented change from pre-vious hunting seasons. The unfortunate sadness is that these people are going to be fatal victims of simple stupidity, some-hing that could be changed with even the briefest reflection of even the briefest reflection of thought.

Some of these, people will die because, believe it or not, they preferred holding their shotguns and rifles by the muzzle.
Others will lean their weapons against a bobbing strand of barbed wire or a rickety post while trying to juggle themselves over a fence into somebody's property. Needless to say, such a practice can earn the hunter a quick ticket to the morgue.

a fence into somehod's property. Needless to say, such a practice can earn the hunter a quick ticket of the war was the zany case, too, of the hunter was the zany case, too, of the hunter who brightly told a conservation officer one day last season that he hand'r gotten any zame that morning, but that he'd made a lot of 'sound'' shots. When questioned on this, he answered: "You know what a sound shot is, don't you? You shoot when you hear a sound in the bresh. Sometimes it pays off."
Such nonsense really happens, Impatience, panie, tension and over-excitement are responsible for all sorts of other hunting deaths and injuries. Hunters in this category hunt as though the chubby pheasant they've scared up or the yearling buck bouncing across an ameadow is the last piece of game available on the North American continent. The lead spray they set up chews into the turf, knocks down trees and innocent hystanders and scares every other bit of wildlife for miles. Of course pheasant to buck deer hightalls it away from such chatter, leaving the friend home to a waiting wife.

It's perhaps of interest to each size of the continue of the content of the con worked in fields and woods a large part of their lives — are the men willing to come home empty-handed rather than hurry a shot.

Maybe this year will be better. There's no indication it will be but conservationists and safety experts, weary of counting gunfire deaths and infuries year after year, would like to be told they were wrong in predicting 20 to 30 deaths for Michigan's 1953 hunting seasons.
