License Fee Increase Stated

Proposed increase in hunting and fishing license fees, requested by the conservation commission, must now go to the state legislature for approval or rejection.
The commission, in its January meeting, approved the several increases suggested by department workers as one method of regaining financial ground lost through rising costs of recent years.
The suggested increases are: resident fishing license, from $1.50 to $2; annual non-resident fishing license, from $2 to $3; 15-day non-resident fishing license, from $2 to $3; trout stamp, from $1 to $2; and resident small game hunting license, from $2 to $2.50.
Also, it was asked that both residents and nonresidents be required to buy licenses in order to fish in Great Lakes waters surrounding Michigan.
Department revenue officers say the increases, if approved, could not take effect until 1955. By then they say, most revenue money stored up in the fish and game protection fund will have been used in meeting yearly department deficits.
Workers say the proposed increases would add about $1.6 million yearly, enough to satisfy present budget requirements.

COMMISSION OKAYS $130,000 PROJECT AT RECENT MEET

Extensive water-hed development work will begin on the Cedar River in Gladwin, Clare and Roscommon Counties, possibly next spring, conservation department fisheries workers say.
The conservation commission last week authorized the work that is expected to cost about $130,000 over a period of years.
Along the transfer of valley pike over the dam at Newaygo was again approved and operations will start there under about the same conditions as last year.
Some changes in fishing conditions below the dam are, however, going to make it tough for chislers to take and keep these pike for period use. The commission approved the changes to eliminate a problem that has grown up in recent years.
Also of interest to fishermen was the commission decision to purchase fishing sides on Chaudler Lake in Grand Traverse County and on Cowden Lake in Montcalm County.

Juvenile Delinquency - How It Starts
Just to prove my contention that adults are the cause of delinquency in children, I want to cite what I just witnessed.
A father and young teen-age son were hunting in a thickly populated area. Started by the hum of guns, I looked out and saw the father standing on one side of a back yard fence watching while the young son clambered over the fence and retrieved the dead bunny from the middle of the back yard.
As long as parents set such an example of law-breaking and imprudence on other people's rights and property there can be no hope of easing the delinquency situation.
Parents, whether by example or neglect, are the real delinquents, I say.
Apparently they were local people as there was no car around.
The police were notified where the hunting was being done. I did not see anyone investigate, though the hunters were in the area for about an hour.

No. 3: Don't Hit a Pedestrian When His Back Is Turned

When you start up and turn right on a green signal light watch for a pedestrian who steps off the curb to cross on the same green signal. By starting on the green and keeping within the crosswalk he has the right of way. The more important point is that he has his back to you and he's not coming.
Certainly he is in your way. Obviously he should turn his head and look left before stepping out into traffic. Naturally you would like to have him wait for you to cross first but he is under a dog in the traffic stream. Give him a break. Remember, when you park your car you, too, become a pedestrian.
