Forbes Against Death Penalty

By REESA PESICK
Special Writer

LANSING
State Rep. Joseph Forbes (D-Oak Park) says he is opposed to reinstating the death penalty on first-degree, pre-meditated murder charges.

Forbes, whose district includes Southfield, says one of the hottest items before the House has been the effort to force out of committee a proposal to reinstate the death penalty.

An attempt to force the measure out of committee for House debate and vote failed when 59 representatives voted to discharge the committee, and 56 voted against the move. It would have taken 56 votes to discharge the committee, or force the proposal onto the floor.

Forbes was one of the 56 voting against discharging the committee. "I feel that to reinstate capital punishment, which has been banned in Michigan since 1846, would be a step backward in criminal law."

"It doesn't stem murder or crime," he said.

He cited California and New York as examples. Both have the death penalty, he said, but their crime has risen at the same rate as Michigan.

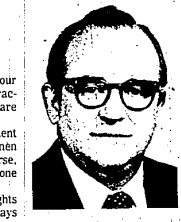

He said policemen and firemen are only kidding themself if they think reinstatement of the death penalty will do any good.

He said the laws regarding offenders today are too lenient and vague.

"It's going to be up to the Supreme Court to render more conservative decisions than the Warren Court did."

Dog racing has been an issue Forbes has bitterly opposed. He emphasized the inhumane treatment dogs are subjected to in training.
