

Hunt Is Unopposed

Norman L. Hunt, completing his seventh year as a trustee, will be unopposed in the June 11 Clarenceville school board election.

Hunt, who lives at 21215 St. Francis in the Farmington sector of the school district, originally was named to the board in 1966 to fill a vacancy brought on by the resignation of Trustee Fred Bailey. He is the owner of an industrial firm, Micromatic, located in Detroit.

Mini-Courses Liven Jr. High

Students who have had a hidden desire to study the history of Laurel and Hardy, take a boys' cooking class or girls' shop class, learn to produce movies or be an organic gardener now have their chance at Clarenceville Junior High School.

Students are taking part in a program of 26 "mini-courses" offered daily from 10 until 10:30 a.m.

A student idea, it gained approval from teachers and administrators and soon grew into an active program.

Students drew up a list of courses and distributed it to teachers requesting a title, description and capacity for each class. A mini-class catalogue was compiled and distributed to each student.

On April 13, students participated in a simulated college-type registration conducted by student council members. By April 30, some 630 students were taking the courses.

"The excitement and interest which has been generated are certainly contagious," said Dr. James O'Leary, assistant superintendent. "The manner in which students and teachers were enthusiastically immersed in their projects while working cooperatively in a very close informal atmosphere, gave me a strong feeling of close rapport with each group."
