Good Forage Lessens Protein, Grain Needs

Farmers who do a better than average job of harvesting, storing and feeding high quality forage can cut their grain and protein feeding by 25 per cent, declares a Michigan State College agricultural economist.

C. R. Hogland asserts that the average Michigan farmer can add $30 to $40 per acre to his profit by improving the quality of his forage. Improving forage quality, he admits, may often add $10 to $15 to the cost of producing one acre of forage. Extra fertilizer, lime, a better job of seed pay off in increased yields and lower costs per ton of forage produced.

but he wanted some Democrats on the committee to "be sure there is no whitewash."

Ziegler says he has no objection to investigation. He offers to supply detailed figures used to compile the report which the highway Department files annually. "The legislature requires a figure every two years - we give them one every year," he explains.

"Talking with his head in the clouds," is a description Ziegler and his friends give him. "The governor is deliberately misunderstanding some of the complications involved," continued Ziegler. The commissioner was referring to the complex formula used and time taken between appropriation of money in Washington and completed payment. Ziegler declares that Michigan people are getting roads as quickly as possible. In some cases, he says, the highway department has permitted payment to be completed a year earlier than might otherwise have been the case, he explains.

The important point the commissioner emphasizes: "Michigan has never lost a single penny of federal money building roads."

He explains that the 1954-55 appropriation from Washington is expected to amount to $12 million. Of this $12 million automatically goes to counties. Of the remaining $16 million, about $6 million has already been programmed.

The governor wants to be sure the balance of the $10 million matched with federal dollars; Ziegler says he hopes so too.

On that point, all are agreed.

STATE PUBLISHER NAMED TO MSC'S 'HALL OF FAME'

Howard H. Fitzgerald, former president and publisher of the Pontiac Press has been named to the Michigan State College Newspaper Hall of Fame.

Born in Ovid in 1871, Fitzgerald was publisher of the old St. John News from 1893 to 1905. He was publisher of the "Pontiac Journal" from 1905 to 1912, and president and publisher of the Pontiac Press from 1912 to 1944. He died January 1, 1944.

Fitzgerald was the tenth Michigan newspaperman named to the college's Hall of Fame. He was honored for his leadership in both weekly and daily newspaper fields and for his outstanding influence in civic and state affairs.

Candidates for the posthumous honor are selected by a committee from the Michigan Press Association, the state historical commission and MSC's department of Journalism.

The citation was made by A. A. Applegate, head of the MSC Journalism department, during the annual meeting of the M. P. A. on the college campus. Applegate, who retired July 1 after 19 years on the MSC faculty, was presented a farewell gift by the editors and publishers of M. P. A. newspapers.

"His years of service parallel the growth of the Michigan Press Association," Bailey commented.

Oakland County Health Notes

In years past diphtheria was known as "the killer of children." The prevalence of the disease made it a constant threat to every child and when it was contracted it was almost invariably a very serious illness. Indeed, many did not survive the experience.

With the development of antitoxin a potent weapon was at hand with which to fight and control the severity of the disease once it developed. It also served to provide temporary protection for those recently exposed and before the disease had time to develop. However, the disease is far from an old method of controlling the disease and it wasn't until we further developed immunizing substances that stimulated the individual to his own protective antibodies that the prevalence of the disease was cut down. Today through applying widespread immunization procedures we can practically eliminate the disease in our communities - at least epidemics will not occur. This protective substance can be combined with other substances which will protect from whooping cough and tetanus so that one series of treatments will immunize against all three. This series together with vaccination against smallpox should be provided to every child in the first year of life.

Interestingly enough, however, while the protection attained is at a high level for a period of time following the immunization treatment, it lapses to a lower level in time and should be renewed at intervals until the child is past the age of ten years. The fact that as individuals we come in contact with either cases or carriers of diphtheria so rarely now since the disease is so well controlled, we do not encounter enough stimulation to keep our immunity at a high level. We need "booster shots" to restore the high level of immunity and the continuing protection it affords.

The need for boosters against diphtheria and tetanus, and vaccinations for smallpox increases as the incidence of the disease continues to go down. The immunization that these children receive as infants may have "worn off" and boosters are necessary to assure continued protection. Of course, if through some oversight the child has never been immunized, the complete series should be given. Children who were immunized as infants require only a single booster every three years until they are ten years old to be adequately protected.

The close association of children in the classroom and on the playground increases their chance of exposure to communicable diseases and all parents should be so alert that their youngsters have booster shots against diphtheria and tetanus, and vaccinations for smallpox.

Because people are not being constantly exposed to the diphtheria germ, they lose their immunity faster than formerly and must, therefore, be more vigilant about keeping their children up-to-date.

Since 1945, most diphtheria in the state has occurred in youngsters five to nine years of age. These are the years when the effects of earlier immunization have started to wear off and the "boosters" are needed for continued protection. That is why we must not neglect the "boosters" at the fourth or fifth grade level.

Ten Mile P.T.A. Fetes Bus Drivers

Approximately two hundred were served at the Founders' Day Banquet held Monday evening, February 8, in the cafeteria of the new high school. The Farmington Ten Mile Elementary P. T. A. honored the school bus drivers and their wives, and husbands by having them as their guests for the evening. Several tributes were made and during the program, and parents personally thanked them for a good job well done.

Rev. Russell Lincoln, of the First Universalist Church, gave the invocation. At the close of the meal Mr. Smith and Mrs. Wells, of the music department, led the group in community singing.

Hossler, principal at the Ten Mile School, gave a brief outline of the work and in setting up bus routes and schedules. Mr. Read, assistant superintendent, introduced the bus drivers who were present. He then presented Mr. William J. Janssen, the Safety Engineer from Michigan Mutual Liability Company, who meets with the bus drivers several times each year, and the main speaker, Mr. Don Linford of the local safety division of Michigan Mutual, who gave a talk on safety and also showed safety films to the group.

The following bus drivers were honored: Louis Bowers, Edward Brandt, Mayrie J. Brown, Earl Bye, Mrs. Mary Evert, Paul Jones, William Lancaster, Clarence W. Necker, Harry Pagel, Edward Porter, Emil Pymul, Fred Schroeder, Mrs. Arville Scherwin, Mrs. Clara Simpson, Jack Simpson, John Simpson, Mrs. Ethel Temple, Mrs. Anna Teppo and Kenneth Vader.

Country Auction Proves Profitable At C'ville

The auction held by the Clarendonville P. T. A. Saturday, February 13, proved very successful for the first venture of the organization into this type of money making project.

The auctioneering was handled in an excellent manner by Mr. James Dula, a graduate auctioneer, who owns the Annex Furniture Company.

Every item sold, including bed goods, was contributed by merchants and residents in this area, and it was because of their generous donations that the success of the project was made possible.

P. T. A. officials wish to express their appreciation for the fine cooperation received and are anticipating the possibility of making it an annual project.

The new State Representative will take over his duties in Lansing as soon as the vote has been certified. He will serve until January 1955, the end of the current term. VanDusen replaces Howard R. Estes, who resigned to become director of the Oakland County Infirmary.

Each school in the tournament has two debate teams with two students on each team. Many hours of research preceded the actual tournaments when the students are taught to express themselves simply and accurately, to be friendly and enthusiastic.

Mr. Lloyd Smith supervises the Farmington team and Miss Mary Ann Richardson is the coach of the Clarendonville team.
