Report No. 10
Jones Reports That War Veterans Share Work Load At Spotter Station

Late news releases tell that have been produced in quantity. This is a surprise but only because Russia had progressed so rapidly.

These planes fly at 50,000 feet and fly over to targets here and return non-stop to their home bases. In that they could not previously accomplish this, it seems to open new vistas of communication between their land and ours. This possibility seems more certain in that these reports assure us that these same planes have already been identified "at extreme heights" above the Alaskan and Canadian defense perimeter.

Among citizens a'wasting their time up at our Post in the air spotting business, and in the late afternoon hours, is a present-day business man who, thirteen years ago was stationed at Pearl Harbor when the Japs couldn't strike—but did.

With an observer who, while with the Merchant Marine was far out to sea, so far in fact that the German planes couldn't reach him.
