Special Food Care Needed In Summer

Hot days make it necessary to take special care so that foods you prepare or serve are safe to eat, remarks Dr. Joseph G. Molner of the Detroit Health Department. Since January 1, 23 instances of suspicious food poisonings involving 88 people were investigated by the department. In 19 of these cases food was served to groups at picnics, weddings or meetings in homes or other places where food is not served regularly. Almost invariably the food was prepared in rather large quantities by persons who do not act as food handlers ordinarily.

In most cases the food, when served, the food has not been kept properly refrigerated. Adequate refrigeration is important and meat must be kept refrigerated both before and after it is cooked. Some of the food poisonings come about because meat or potato salad was prepared the day before the party and left overnight in the kitchen or basement instead of being well refrigerated.

Use care and cleanliness whenever you prepare food, Molner says. Just before you touch food, wash your hands and make sure that all the dishes, mixing forks, spoons and pans are thoroughly clean.

Food poisonings are caused by the growth of germs in food and these multiply very rapidly when certain foods are kept at room temperature. In even an hour or two the food may become unfit to eat without changing its taste, appearance or smell. Special care should be given to meats, raw, precooked or cooked, fish, milk, salad dressing, cream fillings, custard puddings and gelatin preparations. All of them should be kept at 50 degrees or lower.

Dr. Molner says food in the picnic basket should be kept clean and cold while it is being prepared and chilled until transferred into an insulated container or one packed in ice for the trip. Sandwiches, ham, potato salad and baked beans can be put into clean, clear jars and then packed in a box filled with cracked ice and thoroughly insulated by wrapping the entire box in newspaper. Keep the refrigerated picnic foods covered, and put them in the shade until you are ready to eat them, concluded Dr. Molner.

The average freight charges on a ton of bituminous coal shipped in the U. S. in 1953 amounted to $3.34, while average cost of coal at the mine was $4.91.

CROSSING YELLOW LINE A GAMBLE TO THE DEATH

The recent traffic accident in Maryland in which 10 persons lost their lives because one of the two drivers was traveling in the wrong lane is a glaring example of many accidents of that type which could be avoided by obeying the law and using common sense, said State Police Commissioner George C. Childs in commenting on the state safety commission's "Share the Road" campaign. Childs is a member of the commission.

"Crossing the yellow line or passing on a hill or curve is just like playing Russian roulette, except that the consequences can be far more serious," he said. "The person who pulls the trigger in Russian roulette also involves the wrong lane gambler also involves others who are lost."

"Head-on collisions have frightening results and these are accidents due to drivers being where they shouldn't be and need not be in the wrong lane."

Childs also pointed out that inattentive and careless drivers are the cause of accidents to others, but are not involved themselves. Failing to give a warning when turning, cutting in too soon after passing and improper passing are some of these causes. "If drivers just used common sense and common courtesy, most of our accidents would be avoided," Childs said. "This requires sharing the road and staying out of your own lane. Incidentally, unsafe passing is one of the violations enforcement officers watch for particularly because it causes so many bad smashups. So don't stay late and stay out of trouble by carefully observing those rules of the road which have been set up for everyone's safety and protection."
