Zoysia Grasses Not Recommended For Use In State

Dreams about a lawn you can plant with zoysia grass and forget just can't come true in Michigan, say Michigan State University specialists. They don't recommend it in Michigan except for some golf tees in the southern tier of counties.

James Rescher, James Tyson and others at the zoysia grasses will do everything climate suits their fancy. But the climate of most of Michigan doesn't fit them.

In seven years of tests at East Lansing, Meyer Zoysia didn't begin to green up until May 15 or 20, and then went off color with the first frost.

During spring and fall, when the cool climate grasses are at their best, Michigan is too dormant. And it grows so slowly in the rest of the cool season that zoysia will almost crowd out other turf.

The zoysia grasses, advises Tyson, is weeds. The pests can have their heyday in the lawn while Meyer Zoysia is dormant. And zoysia is easily established before the worst period of hot summer weather which makes the zoysia grow. The new grasses need daytime temperatures averaging 70 degrees and a humidity of 85 to 95 percent to do their best.

So, the zoysia grasses do much better south of Michigan, and, in some points, even south of Kentucky blue, the red fescue and bentgrasses are still best for Michigan lawns.

AUTHORITIES URGE SAFETY MEASURES AROUND GARDEN

Home gardeners beware. There are more scold traps in the garden spot than meet the eye.

Garden safety experts offer the following tips to help prevent accidents.

Don't leave long-handled tools, such as hoes and rakes, laying on the ground. Upturned rake prongs can puncture feet. Flying hammers can seriously injure a person.

Paint tool handles a color, such as orange or bright yellow to make them clearly visible. They should be put away promptly after use.

Use a storage space for tools. Tools, particularly those with sharp edges, should be kept out of children's reach. Hand tools and long-handled tools should be hung on a wall storage board.

Wear heavy gloves when planting, handling or pruning thorny bushes such as roses or barberries.

Some 17,000 people are injured annually while pruning. Follow safe ladder practices when working and use the pruning tool correctly.

Garden sprays and insecticides should be kept locked up when not in use. If a locker is not available, they should be kept out of the reach of children.

Read the directions on each product carefully with special attention to the precautions listed. Never swallow or inhale any insecticide. It is designed to kill.

Safety authorities emphasize the importance of taking it easy when working around the garden. Persons are less likely to injure themselves if they don't overdo. Avoid working in excess heat, wait for the cool of evening.

Gardening and lawn mowing are chores which often lead to sunstroke and heat exhaustion.

Sunstroke makes the skin dry and causes the body to sweat as a high fever. This is accompanied by a throbbing headache, dizziness and bad breathing. Cool the person's body with cold water and rest.

Give him cold water, never ice, to drink.

HOME HANDYMAN PRIME SOURCE OF NEW INVENTIONS

The home handyman, working alone in his own shop, is the prime source of new inventions despite the growth of research laboratories.

A survey by a Michigan State University economist reveals that about one-third of patented discoveries are made by persons not trained in science or technology, and nearly one-half all inventions are made by persons without college degrees.

"The prevailing view that invention today is the exclusive domain of a select group of scientists working in laboratories of large corporations... does not stand up under close investigation," reports Dr. Jacob Schmookler, an assistant professor of economics at MSU.

"But continued public belief in this erroneous view may make it true," Dr. Schmookler warns.

"Potential independent inventors who believe the field has been taken over completely by persons hired to invent, may be discouraged and fail to do what they otherwise would have done... invent."

The economist points out, that the transfer of inventive function from the independent to the hired inventor definitely appears to be slowing down.

WEIGHT CONTROL A PERSONAL JOB. BULLETIN REVEALS

You can't lose weight unless you're really made up your mind to do it.

Weight control is an individual problem. No one can do it for you. The more you lean on someone else for support, the less likely you are to be successful. You must make changes in living as well as in eating, changes which you live with indefinitely - not just for two months while you lose weight.

This philosophy is expressed in a new bulletin, "Live Lean and Like It," available at county extension offices. Written by Dr. Margaret Olson, nutrition professor at Michigan State University, the bulletin tells who should lose weight and then how to go about doing it.

Eating today because you overfed yourself yesterday is not the way to make good food habits. Your body needs the basic nutrients every day and it needs them in the right proportions throughout the day. These daily basic nutrients can be had by including: one pint of skim milk or buttermilk; three servings of high protein food, such as eggs, meat, fish or chicken; three servings of cereal; two servings of green vegetable; two servings of fruit; and three small parts of butter or margarine, or three tablespoons salad oil or shortening.

How much additional food you should add to this basic daily diet depends on how many calories you eat, as an individual, burns in a day. This will vary from 1,600 to 3,000 calories, depending on size, sex, age and the amount of work you do. For example, if you are a young woman who does age size work, you should eat 1,600 to 2,200 calories every day to maintain your weight.

To lose weight, then you must subtract 500 to 1,000 calories per day from this figure.

The extra foods you add to the basic diet may mean a lot in terms of satisfying your appetite, points out Dr. Olson. A potato per day can be an excellent investment in morale; or so can an apple. But a pound of candy or a whole milk instead of skim milk may mean the difference in being satisfied or really hungry before the next meal.

Dr. Olson suggests that a thorough check of your diet should be made every week with relatives in Tennessee.

Keep Septic Tank, Well Far Apart, Health Dept. Urges

If you're a suburban or country home owner, make sure that your water pump is located at least 50 feet to one side or the other of the septic tank, the Michigan Department of Health urged today.

In a series of Spring tips for homeowners and builders, the health department emphasized that "the separation of water supply from sewage disposal isn't just an arbitrary recommendation; it's based on long years of experience. Unless there is clear-cut separation of water from sewage, there is a danger that you'll end up drinking contaminated water."

Willard F. Shepard, department engineering division chief, added that the distance between the water
