Develop New Device To "See" Horn Blast From Car In Rear

A new safety device to let drivers "see" the warning horn blast of a car approaching from the rear has been developed by Ford Motor Company.

It picks up the sound of an approaching horn and flashes a small amber light on the instrument panel to warn that a car wishes to pass.

Ford's electrical engineering department at the Research and Engineering Center, Dearborn, Michigan, made the device because unusual road noises sometimes make it difficult for a motorist to hear horn signals from the rear.

Simple and very compact, the warning signal consists of only three parts—a tiny microphone just above the rear bumper, a mid-sized amplifier and a button-type warning light on the inside of the car.

The microphone picks up only horn signals because it is encased in a tube that resonates only at the sound-wave frequencies of horns, and the instrument light flashes on and off only when a horn blows.

"Horns are loud enough to warn pedestrians, but sometimes a driver traveling 60 miles an hour with his car windows closed may not hear the horn of an approaching car until it is only a few feet away," explained Charles W. Thomas, manager of Ford's electronic and acoustical department.

"In addition to road and wind noises, radio playing and conversation within cars also have been found to be sources of interference," Thomas said. "The device will aid any older motorists who are hard of hearing."

Thomas said the device has been under development at Ford for two years. It is trouble-free and durable and will last as long as car horns.

We poured our engineering skills into a completely new V8 engine with the "power-pack" built right in, at no extra cost—a fire-breather, for fair.

And we capped the climax by building a new Variable Pitch Dynaflo* that can't be beat for snap, sparkle, smoothness.
