OCCUPATIONAL Therapist Patricia Doppel (left) guides Royce Knepfler, 9-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Knepfler of 23250 Orchard Lake Road, in showing his mother progress he is making in controlling his hands.

Royce for the past two years has been helped by therapists at the Detroit Cerebral Palsy Center in Farmington, a Torch Drive service.

Cerebral Palsy Center Care Proving Helpful To Local Youth

Royce Knepfler, youngest of the four sons of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Knepfler of 23250 Orchard Lake Road, Farmington, attends the Eagle School's ungraded section for handicapped and cerebral palsy children.

When he walks, and especially when he is tired, he drags his left foot. He can't work with his left hand as well as other boys. But his progress during the past two years since he has been receiving occupational therapy treatments twice a week from the Detroit Cerebral Palsy Center, a Torch Drive service, is "wonderful," according to his mother.

"If I had only had the assistance I am now receiving from the center instead of only these past two years, Royce would be far ahead," Mrs. Knepfler said. "Now we are getting results. The therapists at the center know what they are doing, and they take such an interest in each of the youngsters they treat."

The Knepflers felt frustrated for a long time because they knew Royce needed help. They noticed when he was about eight months old that he wasn't getting around by creeping like his three older brothers, Richard, 18; Ronald, 15; and Raymond, 10, had done.

Their doctor in Birmingham where they lived, said the boy was just slow, that his parents were expecting too much of him. A Pontiac doctor diagnosed the trouble as cerebral palsy, an ailment which affects part of the brain in such a way that it is difficult to control muscles. Royce's left side appeared to be affected.

There followed months of taking Royce from one doctor to another, trying to get help for his affliction. Mrs. Knepfler massaged affected muscles three times a day.

Meanwhile, Royce's father, a foreman in the Ex-Cell-O plant in Highland Park, had moved his family to Farmington. Mrs. Knepfler remembered that as a girl she had spent some time in the Michigan Children's Hospital Convalescent Home at Farmington. She took Royce there, in the same building where she had been treated for illness as a child. Mrs. Knepfler found the Cerebral Palsy Center had been established. Royce was nearly seven years old by that time. His affliction was showing little improvement.

A little more than two years of twice-a-week therapy treatments have done wonders for the boy, according to Mrs. Knepfler. He still has a tendency to drag his left foot at times, and his sense of balance is still uncertain. He has worn out three bicycles trying to learn to ride like other boys. He "walks" his bicycle, but can't balance it in motion.

Royce plays baseball and football with other boys in the neighborhood and goes fishing, often with his father. He can lace and tie his shoes and has been making things which require two-hand coordination. He is learning to swim with difficulty. It requires considerable effort to move his left hand do what he wants it to do. But he is doing much better than his parents would have believed possible three years ago.

The Knepflers pay fee for Royce's treatments. But they have been assured that the same treatments would be available were they unable to pay. That is because funds raised each year in the United Foundation's Torch Drive are allocated to the center. Service is given on the basis of need rather than ability to pay.

The Detroit Cerebral Palsy Center in Farmington is one of 195 health and community services that will receive funds raised in the Ninth Annual Torch Drive, to be held October 15 through November 7. Included also are such widely-known organizations as the American Red Cross, the American Cancer Society, and the Michigan Heart Association.

An officer of the Sun Oil Company warns that small communities must do more long-range planning or face the prospect of having state, interstate and federal authorities and commissions take over. Problems which, in his opinion, can and should be solved at the local level include transportation, housing, labor supply, water, and adequacy of investment capital.

A Labor Department analysis says that industry's labor costs increased 61 per cent in the past 10 years against only a 26 per cent increase in labor's average productivity. National Review points out that the difference "could be bridged only by price inflation."

Urge Exercise To Help Prevent Heart Attacks

Businessmen and other sedentary workers who are willing to do a few pushups and other exercises may save themselves from the nation's "big killer"—heart attack.

This is a conclusion of a Michigan State University research team which conducted a supervised exercise program involving middle-aged subjects.

Thirty-one M. S. U. staff members, mostly in the 40 to 55 age bracket, were divided into two groups. Half of them took regular exercise for three months—two or three hour-long periods of swimming or calisthenics a week to duplicate the sort of schedule possible for a busy man. The other subjects served as a control and followed their usual sedentary routine.

The investigators were primarily interested in finding out the effects of exercise on cholesterol level in the blood, since it is known that persons with high levels of cholesterol are more subject to heart attacks.

Cholesterol, a fat substance, tends to build up in the blood of some people, particularly middle-aged men, explained Dr. Henry J. Montoya, M. S. U. physical education specialist who directed the study. "The fat deposits may thicken artery walls and make the individual more prone to heart attacks," he said.

The Preacher looked over the collection plate and said:
"I advertised that the poor would always be welcome at this church, and I see from looking at the plate that they have come."

Professor (rapping on desk during class): "Order."
Student: "Beer."
