Local Girl Participating In College's New Teacher's Training Program

Marilyn Walker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Walker of 33801 State Street, was one of 15 Mercy College, Detroit, seniors who returned to college two weeks early this year to gain practical training in teaching techniques.

The fifteen, all education majors at Mercy College, joined veteran teachers right after Labor Day in five Detroit Public Schools and two parochial schools. The schools were Cook, Newton, Emerson, Bow, Macdowell, St. Monica's and Immaculate Heart of Mary. Marilyn was assigned to do her student teaching at Bow School.

Unique in this experiment, the student-teachers reported to their respective schools the day before classes began. In this way, they observed and participated in the various duties that teachers on counters before actual classwork began.

Dr. Yvonne Lofthouse, chairman of the Division of Education at Mercy College, had worked on this new phase of the teaching program since early in the year. Contacts with the Board of Education, district supervisors, principals and individual teachers who would be doing the guidance work were completed last June. At that time, the fifteen young women were notified of their assignments.

"We hope to make teaching education more realistic," commented Dr. Lofthouse, "and at the same time give our young women a chance to try their wings."

Until classes began at Mercy College September 18, the students assisted regular staff teachers in the elementary classrooms and homerooms at their respective schools.

When regular college classes began, all student-teachers started practice-teaching half-days only, and returned to the campus for classes for the remainder of the day.

On November 11, at mid-term, there will be another change in the Division of Education teaching program. Dr. Lofthouse said: For the remaining eight weeks of the school semester, the student-teachers will teach full days instead of half days... in the mornings in homerooms, and in the afternoons in classes of their major specialty.

man across the bridge when it is completed and opened to traffic. He will pay the toll, to dramatize the way the bridge is being financed.

The $100,000,000 span is being financed by a bond issue, which will be paid for from tolls.

For a time, it appeared that Michigan might get Federal aid for the bridge starting next year because it links highways that are a part of the interstate network qualifying for the help.

But U.S. Bureau of Public Roads officials said last week it will be a year before Michigan can be certain of the plan and, even then, the prospects are dim.

PRELIMINARY REPORTS on the 1957 tourist season show that more people visited the state but spent less money.

The state tourist council is working on plans to extend the summer tourist season into the fall and winter — and eventually advertise Michigan as a year around resort area.

The usual summer attractions then will be linked with hunting and fishing in the fall, and winter, the skiing, and other winter sports. Then comes summer and the cycle starts again.

Local School Designers Featured On Television
The architectural firm of Eberle M. Smith Associates, designers of the Farmington High School and our elementary schools in the Farmington School District, were featured on the television show, "Industry on Parade", last Saturday.

The program, which appeared on WYV-TV at 6:15 p.m., featured the architects' use of scale models for purposes of study and research prior to actual construction.

This program was one in a weekly series sponsored by the National Association of Manufacturers.
