The Green Thumb

By GEORGE ABRAHAM

We've had information about these pests before, but would like to mention them again.

The large, gray, paper nests, shaped somewhat like a football and located in trees and shrubs, are the product of one of the hornet species—not of honey bees.

Each nest starts new in the spring and becomes maximum size in the fall. Only the queens, the laying females, overwinter. Meanwhile the nest is ruined during the winter by birds and other animals seeking the remaining larvae. The nest is not reused the following year.

When hornets become a problem, your best bet is to control them with an aerosol spray designed for wasps and bees. Some of these aerosols are equipped with special nozzles allowing you to remain eight to 12 feet away.

Spray in the evening when the hornets are in the nest, directing the spray at the entrance hole at the bottom of the nest. Repeat if necessary.

Yellow jackets are often confused with honey bees, but they have definite black and yellowish bands on the abdomen.

Yellow jackets nest in the ground or along foundations and are often encountered while trimming shrubs, mowing, feeding, etc. The nest is also a paper nest and is located several inches to a underground.

Spray or dust the entrance hole of the nest, using a wasp or hornet aerosol or a prepared spray or dust containing Sevin (carbaryl).

The gardenia is one of the toughest house plants there is to blossom. In a greenhouse, the gardenia is at home, but in the average home, it is out of place.

In its native China, the gardenia grows in a cool, moist climate on hillsides where drainage is never lacking.

It likes high humidity. Pots can be placed on a tray of dampened pebbles. Also, the foliage can be sprayed or syringed frequently. Place a plastic sheet over the plant to maintain humidity and to prevent buds from dropping.

This plant likes good light, but not direct sunlight. Give it a "bright" window. Best night temperature is 60 to 65 degrees and day temperature around 70 to 75 degrees. Putting the plant outdoors in summer is a common practice as it helps buds form.

Start new plants by tip cuttings from your original plant. Cuttings can be four to six inches long. Remove the bottom foliage and insert stems in moist sand, or sand-peat mixture.

GREEN THUMB CLINIC: "Our squash grew fine until suddenly they started to wilt. What caused this?"

Answer: "Sounds like the squash borer. It hits squash, cucumbers, pumpkins and even melons. Next year, spray the vines at base of runners with methoxychlor two tablespoons to a gallon of water (or you can use Sevin, same rate). Give two doses at seven day intervals. After harvest collect vines and burn."

Folding Doors Space Savers

Got a hang-up about closets?

Here are some hints on handling common closet problems.

Do closets look dull? Make them an elegant room accent by installing lower doors of ponderosa pine. The doors come fully-louvered, or with louvers above solid wood panels.

They can be used singly or in series, and are obtainable in swing-out, sliding or folding styles.

Paint them to blend or contrast with room decor, or stain the wood to enhance its rich natural grain.

Worried about mildew? The free circulation of air permitted through louvers helps keep closets—and their contents—dry and fresh-smelling. (It's dampness that causes mildew and moldiness.)

Need more storage space? It's possible to have closets in relatively small foyers and narrow hallways.

Doors make the difference here, too. Where there is not enough floor clearance for "swing-out" doors, use folding or sliding styles.

Folding doors open and close accordion-fashion, so they require minimal floor space. Sliding doors which move on tracks need no floor space at all.
