BILLY THE KID

THE MOST FAMOUS OF THE BAD MEN OF THE WEST By Frank J. Arkins

HOWLING mob of fortune-hunters crowded into Silver City, New Marko, in the seventles. The uncovering of mineral wealth was beset with great danger. The Apaches were onlike war paralla. It was hazardoop to travel in the country witfout an easert, better the magnet of wealth in the mines drew men to the best interest of the community there were rough men, for the reaching of the community there were rough men, for the reaching of the community there were rough men, for the reaching of the community there were rough men, for the reaching camps is loaded in the mountains and distant from civilization.

In that community there lived a boy of seventeen years of age, respected and loved by all lies was a favorite among the young men and considered a model youth by the old. He was centises a child. His face was deliquedly molied, his skin as far as a girls, alls knads small and his skin as far as a girls, alls knads small and in a considered a model youth by the old. He was centised in a local store and was considered a most accommodating clerk. The gruff community was convulsed with horror and dunfounded with astonishment one afterpoon when the news spread like widder that ladney had backed a man to death with a butchey-knife and was fleeling for this life on the back of a stoles horse.

The murder was particularly alrocious. The murder was particularly alrocious from the properties of the control of the compelled strangers to exchange horses with him, estered the particular of the people of the properties of the best mounts at the various ranches alone his way and spread consternation wherever he wont. A western form was never more surprised the majority of the people still defended him; there was some presson, bit friends declared, for his strange act. But as news came of the way he was striking terror in the Yalley of the Pecos where the roughest men in the southwest lived, the mind of the public was changed. From that time on his murderous exploits filled the hearts of men with fear. The boy's name in western history became forever after fillity the Kid. His name of Bonney is all but forzotten. As the Kid, he stands as one of the great historical figures of the cow country, one of the worst youths that man of almost a strain of the cow country, one of the worst youths that man of almost comment of the start of the cow country, one of the worst youths that mind the minding camps of the Oregon mountains was electrical. Here he conceived the Idea that to evade arrest he must flight his way to the front single-handed. He boldly traded horses, obtained recedit, bought supplies, because he could shoot straight with a revolver and had threatened the Heboldly traded horses, obtained recedit, bought supplies, because he could shoot straight with a revolver and had threatened the Heboldly traded horses, obtained the polyment of the property of the man of the commenced the boy's exploits in the Likky of human's cover and the start of the country of the man of the country of the country of the man of the country of the man of the country of the country of the country of the country of the man of the country of the

The deputy sporred his poop, the kild after him. They exchanged shots, and the officer seesaged without time on it was dangerous for the kild to stater a community. He raided north kild to stater a community which was larger than many eastern states. There was not a line of railway or telegraph in k. and not telephones. It was easy, to get away.

At that time shere was rivairy between the different outfus. The country was filled with had men; and they were about evenly divided among the cowmen. Cattle stealing was a common thing. The Kild became involved in a number of rows, and he took sides. His reputation as a "killer" grew.

Thadoubfedly a number of these men were killed as a result of trouble among themselves, and the killing laid to the door? of the kild was easy. He could not deny it. No dee would have believed him it he had. Besides, the more murders credited to him, the greater the fear, in which be would be held.

Thus it was that it flutly became impossible of sheaff of

Thus it was that it finally became impossible to get any one to accept the position of sheriff of Lincoth county, for it was only a question of time when he would run across the youthful denon. The Kitk knew that he had terrorized the country. He knew that the instant he let down its found he would be killed. His safety lay in continuing.

The outlaws, were now as auxious to end his career as were the jawabiling people of the village. His friends commenced to murmur. The Kid was now reported in a dozen places at the same time and these stories the turned to his advantage by any character of the same time and these stories the turned to his advantage by any middle segarated consumers.

Pat Garrett, a lanky Alahaman, who had being dorganise the Texas Rangers and had assisted in driving the bad men out of Texas to the first water west of the Staked Plains, was invited by the cattlemen to locate in New Mexico. They wanted him to restore order. The only was that could be done was either to arrest or to Ellith the Kid.

He was cleeted without opposition and took hold with an iron hand. He was an organizer, and men flocked to his studerd. They deline the could cope with the situation.

The Capture of the Kid.

In November, ISSO, Garrett came upon the Kid suddenly and captured him, with several others, after killing one iman.

"Listen!" shouted the tall sheriff during a slight lull. "The man is my prisoner. You told me to arrest him. I have. He must have a fair rial. I know he is guilty. But it is for a jury to pronounce him so. You can not take him while I have a breath of life left, or while Billy the Kid bas, either!"

Saying which he passed a revolver to the boy who had struck terror into the Pecos Valley, "You must get two of us now."

Hack to back the sheriff, of Lincoin county and the most norde murders if the southwest stood. "Now, Billy," caustioned Garret. "don't shoot miles it folly you to Remember that."

It was impossible to tell what was working in the mind concered behind the childish face of the Kid. It was equally as impossible to read the thoughts of the determined sheriff who waited with apparent unconcern. The crowd knew and feared the Kid. With only Garrett to fight, the members might have risked it. With a revolver in the Kid's hand, they besisted, Garrett was quick to see the advantage he had gained.

"Now you will all move quietly away," he anounced decisively.

Here are the short one of the Kid shoard the trials which harrived a few moments later. The Keeper and the "Makinge."

The Kid was tried in another county. He had not friends and no defense. There were plenty of winesses against him now that the was a prisoner. He was defended by an attorney who made a harve fight. It was, early, the shoon! 'morning, probably about 3 a m, when the silent sheriff saw in front of nim the cable in which the Kid slept. He and his men dienfounted and approached the house Garrett reached the porch with his deputies and quietly stepped into Maxwell's room. There are several accounts of what took place. One is to the effect that Garrett left his deputies stationed outside beyond the house. He was whisprine to Maxwell, when the Kid, who was a light sleeper, awoke, and tiptoeins caroes the porch, entered, revolver in hand, and asked: "Who was that who tast came! Where is he?" From his perition Garrett could see him distinctly and bad the Kid been looking, he might have, distinguished he form of the sheriff, standing by the band, princed?
