Homework Needed to Supplement Education

When school comes, can homework be far behind? It's a wise parent who prepares himself and his child for a school year that will surely require much work at home designed to supplement and broaden work done in the classroom.

Most parents, say the Michigan and National Education Associations, favor homework, provided it's reasonable in amount, geared to the child's maturity, geared to the child's abilities, really teaches him something, and does not upset the whole household.

On the whole, schools take these points into account. You'll find teachers assigning children original research projects, perhaps, to answer questions that come up and can't be answered in class. One third-grade teacher says that her pupils have

Helpful Hints To Avoid Being Fraud Victim

Although there are many different techniques used to bilk the public, here are some general rules to keep in mind to avoid being the victim of frauds and sharpies after an "easy buck."

Whenever possible shop with local merchants comparing prices and quality of products.

If you buy from door to door salesmen, demand identification when they claim to represent a national firm. Ask salesmen to call back and in the meantime check with the Chamber of Commerce or Better Business Bureau as to the reputation of the firm. Also, use this time to compare prices with those offered by local merchants. Often you will find that your merchant offers as good or even a better price.

Before you sign anything, make sure what, if any, interest or carrying charges are added to the bill, and have this spelled out in your contract and note. These general hints should be of some value but remember, the most valuable asset of all is the common sense of the American housewife.

The average woman worker (say is married and 40 years old, the U.S. Labor Department points out.

acquired information on everything from cantilevered porches to butter molds. Another infrequent kind of assignment for the child is to collect information from his family. For example, one teacher asked the class to bring to school a list of all their family's arithmetic problems for one week.

A THIRD KIND of homework turns up when children working on creative writing or written reports want more time than they have in class to elaborate on or revise their efforts.

Most schools feel that homework should be an extension, not of the school day, but of learning activity, with assignments that can be done better away from school.

You can help by giving your child a quiet corner in which he can do his homework. You need to be firm, too, in eliminating some of the distractions, such as television, which interfere with homework.

If you don't understand the school's homework policy, visit your child's teacher. She'll be glad to explain.

Add 21 Miles Of Freeways

Nearly 21 miles were added to Michigan's growing network of freeways late this week. State Highway Commissioner John C. Mackie said 6.1 miles of the M-73 Freeway in Genesee county were opened on Saturday (Aug. 13). Two days later, a 9.45 mile section of Interstate 94 Freeway opened in Van Buren county. The two sections were built at a cost of $11.3 million.

The two openings marked another milestone in Michigan's five-year, $1-3/4 billion highway construction and modernization program. With these two sections Michigan now has more than 400 miles of limited-access freeways. In addition, the longest continuous stretch of freeway will exceed 100 miles.

The Highway Commissioner said Michigan's total mileage of freeways was increased from 387 miles to 408 miles while the longest continuous section of freeway was extended from 84 miles today to 109 miles.
