Planners Split on Re-Zoning
The Farmington Board of Education acting Monday night approved the proposed compromise zoning plan for the ten-acre site north of Farmington Oaks Subdivision, which would be rezoned from residential to commercial and generally expressed the feeling that development should be closely examined.

The Commission's recommendation for the rezoning of Nine Mile now goes before the City Council where a public hearing will be held before the decision is handed down on the matter.

The rezoning request on Farmington's property will not be taken up again by the Commission until their December meeting.

In answer to the charges leveled by Boehnke and Hand, Allen stated his "qualified opinion" as an architect with experience gained while serving on the Planning Commission made his opinion "of some value."

Allen further stated that the Planning Commission's decision in such cases is always subject to the approval of the City Council and, therefore, not binding.

Coming to Allen's defense on the Commission was Bill Burke, who made the point, that since the Planning Commission only voted in an advisory capacity for the City Council, which must finally must pass public approval or opposition, that Commissioner should be allowed to vote as their conscience dictated.

A wave of controversy has been generated over the rezoning proposals to allow multi-family housing and residents in both areas have submitted petitions from homeowners and appeared in force to voice objections.

Objections were raised Monday night by Boehnke concerning a letter from Devere Fleming which the Commission read at its last meeting. Boehnke said the letter should not have been read since the opening action did not have time for rebuttal arguments.

BOEHNKE WAS over ruled in his motion to have the letter read from the minutes of the Commission's meeting.

City Manager John Dinan, at the request of several in the audience, read the Fleming letter again after first clarifying the point raised by Boehnke that all communications brought before the Commission were customarily read as a matter of policy.

Fleming's letter challenged several of the issues raised by his rezoning request. Fleming argued that the rezoning and "lies" were advanced by homeowners, "who don't live close enough to be affected by them."

The point was made also in Fleming's letter that the rezoning could not, he felt, be developed with single family homes of the type found in Farmington Oaks Subdivision. Fleming, helped develop some years ago. Apartments, Fleming claims, of the type he wants to build, would act as a buffer between the residential area to the north and industrial land to the south.

REZONING VOTING on the rezoning request involving the ten-acre site north of Farmington Oaks Subdivision, which would be rezoned from residential to commercial and generally expressed the feeling that development should be closely examined.

The Commission's recommendation for the rezoning of Nine Mile now goes before the City Council where a public hearing will be held before the decision is handed down on the matter.

While two separate operating millage proposals will appear on the ballot, school officials have emphasized repeatedly that this was done only to make it clear to voters exactly what they were being asked to approve. The total $5 per $1,000 equalized valuation levy is needed to maintain an educational system comparable to that of the Farmington School District now, they contend.

IT HAS BEEN pointed out that approval of the $2 per $1,000 levy would provide a little over $200,000 actually be asking school officials to maintain the system on less money than what they now are on a per student basis. The reason for this lies in the fact that the valuation behind each child in the district is not the same. The local tax levied is yielding less and less per child each year.

Between 1959 and last year Farmington found itself losing more and more ground to other districts in the area with higher pay schedules and realized pay increases would be necessary to keep good teachers. The increasing percentage of the teaching personnel not itself which is the backbone of any good educational system. Pay increases bringing the pay for Farmington teachers to the level of other districts in this area were put into effect this year.

IT WAS possible to do this without asking for voter approval of the levy because of a slight budget surplus and also due to the fact that Farmington was declared a "distressed district" by the state. As a result of this "distressed district" classification, the Farmington schools are now getting approximately $175,000 more in state aid.

But, our valuation continues to slip and even with this additional state aid now coming in, it has been determined that it will not be possible to continue to operate in future years with the same operating cost they now being assessed.

School officials said that they were getting approximately $3,000 more in state aid each year, continuing to climb for schools the same as in all other business at a rate of about five per cent yearly. Bringing the pay schedule for local teachers somewhere near the average for other districts in the area making it possible for Farmington to retain most of its teaching staff longer which is desirable but it also results in higher and higher operating costs each year since teachers retained must be given annual raises until maximum salaries are reached.

CONTINUING the present two-mill levy and approving a three-mill increase will mean a little over a half million dollars yearly for school operations. Without this money it is easy to see that some present programs in the school system would have to be eliminated and class sizes increased substantially.

School officials point to their past record in contending that they have operated the local school system economically in the past and plan to continue to do so in the future.

School Election Monday
Farmington's 1953-54 operating cost per pupil was $375.40 while the average for all school systems in Oakland County was $405.78. Last state average available showing that Farmington is spending $30.00 more per pupil for operations than the average for the whole state including systems in rural areas where all pay scales are lower.

Permission to levy the amount now being asked for does not mean that this total amount will necessarily be levied. School officials have stated. If the district's valuation picture improves favorably due to rapid valuation increases in 1958 the valuation being brought into the system to be educated then a lower levy could and would be called for, he said.

THE LOCAL BOARD of Education has proven in the past that it levies no more taxes than are absolutely needed and spends bond money to build new schools when they are determined to be needed, the superintendent of schools stated emphatically.

Some have the feeling that school systems will be coming in for substantially more in state aid money as a result of tax reform legislation now being discussed, Harrison said. The Governor Romney admits that his tax reforms proposal for schools would only mean $3 to $5 more per child in a district, he said.

School officials feel clearly that approval of all three proposals is needed if the school system is to continue to operate as it has in the past. Rejection of any of the proposals will necessitate substantial curtailments and a less than desirable educational system for Farmington, they assert.

The decision will be up to voters on Monday.
