C'ville Pupils Offered Tutors From Madonna College

"Does your child need help to improve his reading?"

If he or she is a member of the Clarenceville Junior or senior high school, an opportunity is here. We are fortunate to be the recipients of a project in tutoring by seniors from Madonna College. It is their hope they may help alleviate the problem of the "dropout" or to help any student improve himself.

ALL PERSONS involved in the project sincerely hope parents and students avail themselves of this opportunity. It will cost only in time and effort. The procedure is as follows:

- 1.) Contact your counselor or your child's counselor.
- 2.) Give the following information:
 - a. Grade level of pupil
 - b. Sex

Discuss Details On Proposed County College

"It is almost inconceivable that we continue to try to run this county without a locally controlled college program," Thomas Atkinson, of the Community College of Cuyahoga County (CCCC), declared Thursday at a joint meeting of that group with the Board of Education of Oakland Schools.

Atkinson, who is research chairman of the CCCC, added, "The hazards of not educating our young people in the State of Michigan are manifold. The hazards of not educating them in Oakland County are of less magnitude, but just as pressing."

Monroe Osmon, a member of the County Board of Education, stated that action has been taken to officially place proposals before the county board of college, providing tax for its support on the June 8 school election ballot.

"A better job of explaining the need for a community college must be done this year than in the past," Osmon said. He referred to the school board's act to permit Oakland County to call a college election and the election date.

Mrs. George Mosher, of Birmingham, who presided at the joint meeting, stated that a six-member board of trustees to be elected would have full authority, under state law, for hiring administrators, selecting sites and setting a time table for putting the college into operation, she said.

Eugene Kutly, CCCC finance chairman, reviewed possibilities of operating the college and building classrooms under the one mill tax proposed.

He said that other Michigan communities had found that one mill plus a $200 charge and state aid of $210 per student will finance a modest building program and provide for the student body of 1,000 the first year of operation. A one mill levy, based on last year's equalized property evaluation will produce $2,050,000.

Recent Congressional action, Kutly said, should provide some financial assistance for buildings, although details of the Federal aid have not yet been announced.
