Madonna College Opens New Academic Building to Classes

When school opens at Madonna College in Livonia for the spring semester today the college and the students will be making history: they will be entering for the first time, the doors of the newly constructed Madonna College Academic Building. The academic building, under construction since 1963, is the outcome of years of planning and waiting. When Madonna college was founded in 1947, it was housed in the Felician Sisters Motherhouse. While the enrollment was small, the facilities were sufficient and satisfactory. With the accreditation of the institution, with the growth of the suburbs of Detroit, the enrollment increased gradually. It is necessary to build new accommodations if the institution were to continue to serve the community. And so, today, Madonna campus boasts an expansion of 40%.

tionally beautiful natural setting, appropriately fitted with buildings designed by Robert L. Sundbom and Associates. Located on an attractively landscaped 220-acre site in the heart of the rapidly growing city of Livonia and removed by hundreds of feet from Schoolcraft road, the campus breathes an atmosphere of peace and beauty, conducive to earnest study and to a refinement of aesthetic tastes. Midway between Detroit and Ann Arbor, the college is conveniently located near business, art, research, and culture centers. New residence halls of contemporary design have been opened for occupancy in 1963. These include girls dormitories, a dining hall, student center, faculty residence and a guest and home management house. The dining hall is planned to provide service for 1,000 students and faculty members. The three floors of double and single rooms, sectioned into the south, east, and west wings accommodate 250 students, provide lounges, recreation areas, and a spacious hall for social functions. South of the dormitory-dining unit and separated by a small lake, is the second part of the project—a multi-purpose 180 room academic building. The administrative, academic, and independent units are linked by an elevated academic classroom-seminar-office structure which integrates the various departments of the college into a unified complex. Included in this unit are the administration building, the library with a total capacity of 100,000 volumes, the science, art, music, and home economics departments. At the moment, before construction is fully completed, the administration area, the regular classrooms and a 160-musical instrument lecture room will be used. The three divisions of the science department, chemistry with three labs, physics, one, and biology, one lab with two lecture rooms, and an animal and refrigerator room will also be completed. Waiting for completion within the spring semester is the art department in which separate rooms have been designed for ceramics and sculpture, painting and drawing, lettering and design, crafts and weaving. There will also be a kiln room, four storage rooms and a card shop. There will also be an area for the education department, including a curriculum library, audio-visual rooms, and classrooms. The music department will provide five audio-booths, six practice rooms and two studios. Home economists will use food, clothing, and textile labs. A reporting room, staff area with a universal desk, an office and processing room with photography will comprise the journalism department. There will be a record room and a lab for the language department. The business department will include rooms for typing, accounting, and business machines. In addition there will be student lounges, a snack area, and two locker rooms. With accommodations such as these, all of the new and all of them modern, the faculty and administration of Madonna College hope to increase the effectiveness of the private, independent, educational institution which holds the future of so many in its hands.
