The John Bailers of Farmington, who journeyed to Cleveland with Shirley and Clifford Johnson last week to attend the mid-winter meeting of the Coast Guard Auxiliary.

While talking to Shirley we began to realize the scope of the work done by the Auxiliary and the dedication with which its members work.

Over 50 men from this area, all boasting enthusiasm, made the trip to Cleveland to participate in what amounts to a seminar in boating safety. Designed to stimulate their interest in promoting water safety and to stress the importance of the work they accomplish, the conference returned its members to their homes to conduct safety boating classes, to inspect privately owned boats for safeboating equipment, and in general to do whatever else might do to keep our Water Wonderland free from tragic, unnecessary, accidents.

Cliff Johnson's flotilla is offering a 10-week course in boating safety at Bentley High School. It will begin this month and be open to adults and to families—kids keep adults in line.

We also learned that upon request auxiliary members will be happy to inspect anyone's boat for safety equipment. If a boat meets the requirements of the C.G.A. its owner receives a decal to put on his boat indicating it has passed inspection. The Coast Guard Auxiliary was initiated just prior to World War II. Its purpose then was to create a civilian volunteer group to handle local inspections and thus relieve many Coast Guardmen for active duty elsewhere. The Auxiliary performed its job so well during the war that they continue to work now in close association with the Coast Guard. Its members are all civilians, all volunteers and all devoted to their task.

Rae Pearlman, Dolores Friedman and Bess Fox were among those who helped the Northville State Hospital Auxiliary observe its seventh birthday this week. Speaker for the occasion was Mrs. Carolyn Seefelt, director of social service in the hospital.
