

Radio Listeners Follow Search for Bitten Boy

A 12 year old boy from Farmington Township held the griped attention of perhaps thousands of Detroit-area music fans Friday night.

Listeners to late evening disc jockeys were in on the running account of a search for the youth, Scott Daggett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Daggett, of 34108 Northwick, by the United States Coast Guard.

Scott had been bitten on one finger of his right hand by a stray dog, on Wednesday June 16, at the World's Fair Marina. The Daggetts had docked their 32-foot cabin cruiser there during a stay in New York. The Farmington Township family headed for home on the following day.

The New York Dept. of Health found out that the dog bite incident on Friday, and feared that the dog might be rabid. Rabies is a disease that attacks the central nervous system. It is almost always fatal if left untreated until it reaches the brain. The closer the initial bite is to the brain the quicker the disease reaches the fatal point. In this case with the bite in the victim's hand, it was difficult to project how long it would take for the disease to become dangerous—if the dog happened to be rabid.

Obviously, the Health Dept. thought there was a need for urgency. It notified the Coast Guard, which proceeded to ring off the whole Hudson Valley. The stricken was to make contact with the cruiser before it could get out into Lake Erie, where it would be far more difficult to locate.

The Coast Guard used cutters and helicopters, and newscasters, hopeful that the Daggetts might be listening to the radio, urged them to pull into the nearest port and get their son to a doctor.

Adding to the drama, the original Coast Guard message was garbled and said the dog definitely was rabid.

The cruiser was finally docked at Fishkill, New York. In the meantime, the dog was also caught, and it is now being determined whether it has the disease.

Star Cutter Deadlocked

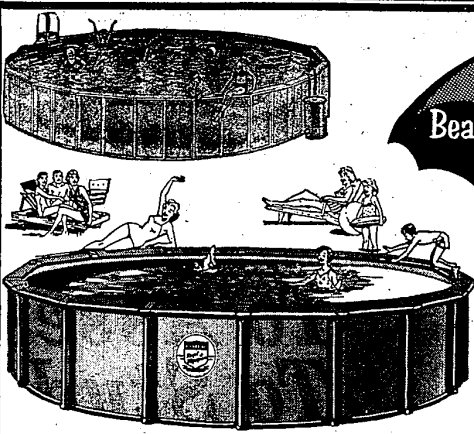

No end is in sight in the protracted Star Cutter strike, now in its sixth week. According to John Ellis, President of UAW Local 985, which is representing the workers:

"The morale of the workers is high. They're determined to bring the strike to a fair conclusion. We are available for a meeting when the company wants to meet."

To this, Company Vice President Glenn E. Johnston replies: "Meetings were broken off at the suggestion of the mediators, with the understanding that the next meeting would be held at the call of the mediators. The Company stands ready to attend any such meeting."

Star Cutter, which is located at 34500 Grand River, in Farmington Township, is the originator of, and one of the nation's largest manufacturers of the underground hob. A hob is a tool for the cutting of gears.

The mediators were appointed by the State and Federal Governments, through the mutual consent of labor and management to put their differences to arbitration.
