PERFECT ANAGRAM.

TRAINING FOR OFFICE.

It will be recalled that when Christ was brought before Pilate, the Roman governor (according to St. John's version of the story) asked him, "What is truth?"

In the Latin text of the Vulgate the question runs, "Quid ait veritas?" Now, the answer is found in the question itself, without adding or subtracting a single letter. "Est vir qui adest," the rearrangement gives up, "It is the man who stands before you."—Youth's Companion.

"How did your boy, Henry, come out at college?"

"Why, I thought everybody in the village knew. He was graduated at the head of his political economy class."

"Has he gone to work yet?"

"Not yet. I'm making him take a two years' business course at the commercial school here. After he gets through with that the Civil club is going to run him for mayor."—St. Louis Republic.

Tumbled Over the Bank

Two men, one of whom was a traveling salesman for a cigar firm, narrowly escaped death near the McGee hill Tuesday morning. They had just made the descent of McGee hill with their automobile, a Lambert, and the engine did not have power enough to make the other grade. The brakes also refused to work and the machine commenced to back. Leaving the road at the curve on the west side, it tore through the railing and rolled over and over down a fifteen foot embankment. A gully directly under the automobile protected the men who fell from the machine.

Read the Other Side

By the issue of a little paper called the Electric Railway Service, the D. U. R. has shown a disposition to let the public know that there are two sides to the story of the railway.

This is a sensible plan for the people are inclined to be reasonable and fair in everything that they are fully informed about, but for years the public mind has been stuffed with unfair, and many time vicious, dope by the city papers until people have come to look upon the street and interurban railways as a huge monster that was gradually devouring the people body, soul and breeches.

We all have faults and they are not all on one side. Publicity is the best thing for us all and if the little papers, which can be found in the little boxes in the cars, serve to enlighten the public regarding railway matters they will serve a very good purpose.

COLD JOKE.

The water has spoiled all the biscuits, half of which are nothing but a big lump of mildew, from which, however, we manage to pick out a few fragments which may yet prove eatable. The oatmeal has soured less, but is perfectly green with age. The sugar has disappeared; the chocolate is also green and tastes of soap. However, we have found food, though not as good as we had expected, and we hope to be able to use the best of the biscuits, saving each other that mildew cannot be poisonous. Iverson even goes so far as to declare it must be wholesome, being after all a sort of "green stuff!"—From "Lost in the Arctic," by Einar Mikkelsen.
