REMEMBER?

How Christmas was years ago, with the strings of popcorn and cranberries on the tree. And how mother stayed up half the night preparing the feast. I remember the family and the toys, and the smell of turkey drifting up the stairs. Better than that. I go back and relive those memories through the pictures we took back then.

Christmas has changed now, but cameras have changed even more. Today, a ten-year-old with a new KODAK INSTAMATIC Camera can take better pictures or more than those some adults did forty years ago. Today, picture-taking can be a part of the fun.

These new ones are KODAK INSTAMATIC Cameras with flashcube. I'd say they were natural, and as simple and easy as conversation. There are six new KODAK INSTAMATIC Cameras that take snapshots or slides. All feature drop-in loading and pop-on flash. They don't use flashbulbs! They use a new kind of pop-on flash unit for flash pictures. That's right, just drop in a film cartridge, pop on a flashcube, and take four flash pictures in a row without changing flash bulbs.

But you might be even more surprised by the new KODAK INSTAMATIC Camera. They load instantly too. Take the film cartridge from the box, drop it in the camera and start taking movies. There's absolutely no winding or touching film over. And the movies they take are bigger on the screen, so they're sharper, more colorful on your screen. More than ever like life itself. If your family's lucky enough to get one of these new cameras for Christmas, I know you'll find it easier to use, and have more fun with it than any camera we ever owned in the old days. You ought to stop in and see these new cameras one day this week. It might turn out to be your lucky day.
