Fighting Dutch Elm Disease With Lime and Epsom Salts

Dear Sir:

Property owners fighting to save their valuable elm trees from the Dutch elm disease extend their sincere thanks to the Farmington Enterprise and to those city officials who have joined them.

In the front page article of the August 18 issue of the Enterprise mention was made by Councilman Hugo Peterson that he used a solution of lime and Epsom salts to treat his trees.

This treatment was discovered by a retired judge of Wal-lingford, Conn., Gerald J. Dineen, who has had amazing success in preventing the disease from attacking his trees.

The city of Lincoln Park sent two investigators to talk personally with Mr. Dineen to get first hand information about his program. Elm owners all over the country are using his method.

Here is an outline condensed from information received directly from Mr. Dineen who is happy to share his experiences with all.

OUTLINE OF TREATMENT FOR ELM TREES

1. Remove grass from around base of tree for distance of one foot or more and shape area to hold water.
2. Remove earth on top and alongside of one root on a 1-foot diameter tree (two roots on 2-foot diameter, three roots on 3-foot, etc.) to a depth of about six inches and length of about ten inches.
3. With a paint scraper or other sharp tool scratch roots exposed lengthwise to bare several seepage openings in root skin.

4. Fill this area next to the root with a full quart of agricultural lime (type containing high percentage of magnesium).

5. Replace the removed earth over the lime and root.

6. Mix six tablespoonfuls of epsom salts (magnesium) in a gallon of water and pour over and alongside other roots not treated with lime. Do this once a month during the foliage season.

7. Water profusely during dry summer days allowing it to trickle down and moisten the bark of the trunk. Dehydration causes vulnerability to beetle attack.

8. Tree feeding is recommended. Pierce holes in ground around trunk from four to eight feet away. Fill with standard fertilizer.

9. Maintain sanitation by immediate removal of diseased trees plus all dead and dying branches on otherwise healthy ones.

10. Burn all this removed wood for it is in this wood that beetles propagate and thrive.

One such treatment of roots will last from two to three years.

(Condensed from information furnished by Gerald J. Dineen.)

Sincerely,
E. T. Satory
