Our Queen of Hearts Makes Clear Her Own Recipe for Spring Cleaning

By Faith Gillespie

Look around, look around, spring is here.

The evidence is incontestable. Sacks of lawn food are stacked in the garage, with bags of doom to crabgrass. The robins are here again. The crocuses have given way to daffodils and hyacinths, and the forsythia is gloriously golden.

If I needed further assurance, my boys have suddenly, outrageously, thoughtlessly outgrown their school pants. They do it every year, to my amazement and annoyance, and this announces spring to me more surely than the balmy breezes.

There are other proofs, and one of the best is the spritz garden variety of cottage cheese. Look for it when you shop this week. It's delicious, topped with fresh lettuce leaves, and sprinkled with paprika or garnished with creamy French dressing.

If you feel adventurous, shake a few celery seeds over the cottage cheese, or even a little dill seed or weed. Be sure to chill the pears beforehand for the best flavor.

While we are on the subject of the season, let us examine the honorable old American tradition of a pleasantly called Spring Cleaning.

I shudder at the term, which masks all sorts of non-pleasant activities, like digging out closets, and taking down the draperies, and giving fresh water to the puppies. (My goodness, where did all those teeny puppets come from, all of a sudden?)

I think the whole problem began back in the early days of civilization when there were pot-bellied stoves or coal furnaces, and no vacuum cleaners. By the time winter was over, that whole house had to be taken apart systematically from shed to sun porch, and the accumulation of dust and grime had to be gotten rid of somehow.

Fresh air was let in, undoubtedly. But the feather dusters, rac mops, brooms and beaters and all, just rearranged the dust, and how far ahead were they, actually?

Today, with our relatively dust-free central heating and all the mechanical cleaning apparatus, I venture to suggest that our houses are really cleaner year round than Grandma's ever was after she had slaved, scrubbing the walls practically painless and nearly pounding the color out of the oriental rugs. We have discarded her equipment, but we cling to her habit.

If you haven't already guessed it, I am admitting that I am lazy, so I don't believe in spring cleaning at all. There is one thing I do, however: I always clean out my coffee pot in the spring (and whenever else it needs it).

How is your coffee pot? Has your coffee been a bit muddy? Tastes bitter? Has it gotten just a little murky over the winter?

There are at least two excellent methods for refreshing your coffee pot. 1) Put in a slice of lemon and a quart of water and boil it for a few minutes, or if your pot is electric, let it go through its cycle. Then rinse thoroughly. 2) Use one tablespoon of baking soda with six to eight cups of water and follow the above procedure.

Get that coffee pot spring clean... you will notice the difference.

There is an old Chinese proverb that says, "With true friends, even water drunk together is sweet enough," and I quite agree; but I'll take a good cup of coffee any time.
