U of D Offers Good Summer Repertory

By SUE SHAUGHNESSY

Shaw and Shakespeare have traditionally been the mainstays of college summer theatre in the metropolitan area and this is especially true of the University of Detroit Repertory Summer Season. This year, however, finds three plays in repertory at the U. of D. and only one of them Shaw. That's the weakest of the three. Included in the repertory is "Don Juan" in a portion of Shaw's comedy "Man and Superman" which is almost never performed in the body are: Shaw's "Don Juan in Hell," "Oh Dad, Poor Dad" production features Jimmy by Arthur Kopit and "Dark Launce, Jack Keweler and of the Moon" by Edward Hall Youngblood, from Radio Richardson and William Station WJR, and Betty

Wright. "Dark of the Moon" is a new production for U. of D. and its cast is drawn from the University Players, the student dramatic group, and the Players Association, the alumni and community group. First performed more than 20 years ago the play is set in the Smokey Mountains. Director Alan Jorgensen has termed the play as a "North Carolina version of the Ballad of Barbara Allen."

This kind of thing is somewhat of a departure for U. of D. Theatre and generally speaking it is well done. Kathy Marshall as Barbara Allen is competent, while Michael Edmonds as John, a witch boy, is excellent. Roger Middleton almost steals the show in his role as fire-eating Baptist Reverend Preacher Hagler, however.

Probably the funniest and best scene in the entire production is the Revival Meeting which is played strictly for laughs. Kelly Burke should be commended for his portrayal as Marvin Hudsons as Dominic Missini is deserving of praise for the Uncle Smelious role. Emily Haggerty and Alta Harrison as the witches were especially pleasing as was Nancy Linahan in her role as Mrs. Summery, the midwife. The Kopit play is a revival of last season's opening production. The Observer liked neither the play nor the production last time around, but must admit that the summer offering is stronger and much more palatable. Alice Broder in the role of Madam Rosepettle is much
