

Our Queen's New, Rich Recipes Make You Quit Diets

By Faith Gillespie

Ever since this column published the confessions of a suburban chocolate eater, people have been approaching me in the supermarket, on the street, and whispering to me in meetings and at parties.

"You know," they say guardedly, "I'm one too."

Women tell me how they smuggle chocolate covered cherries into the house and hide the box in the toaster so the children won't find it.

They admit to sneaking into the kitchen when no one is looking and devouring all the chocolate chips that were meant for chocolate chip cookies for school lunch buckets.

They explain how they stealthily wrap brownies in their napkin at the PTA meetings, tucking them into their purses against the next day's 4 o'clock famine.

All of this unburdening of conscience surprises me not at all. I even appropriated a fat chocolate covered doughnut from the Observer Publicity Workshop without a single qualm. I shamelessly brought it home and ate it for breakfast with glee.

In recognition of the great numbers of chocophiles in our midst, here are more ways to meet the craving.

FRENCH SILK CHOCOLATE PIE

To make the crust: cream together 1/2 cup soft butter, 1/4 cup sugar, 1/2 teaspoon vanilla, 1/4 teaspoon salt. Stir in one cup sifted flour. Mix in 1/4 cup rolled oats (uncooked). Use your fingers to press dough evenly onto the bottom and sides of a nine-inch pie pan. Bake a high rim around the top. Chill thoroughly before filling.

The filling: Melt a six-ounce package of chocolate chips over hot water. Stir till perfectly smooth, then cool. Cream together in mixing bowl: 1/2 cup butter, one cup sifted confectioners sugar, two teaspoons vanilla, and a dash of salt. Beat with electric mixer at high speed 10 to 15 minutes, till mixture is very fluffy and light.

Add three eggs, one at a time beating about 3 minutes after each.

Quickly fold in the cooled chocolate. When the whole thing is smooth as silk, pour it into the cooled crust. Chill for three or four hours, or overnight. Top with whipped cream and chocolate shavings at serving time. Serves eight. Well, it is supposed to serve eight, but it is too good. The last time I cut it into eight pieces, one guest finished his and said, "I there more."

"Oh no," I said. "It was an eight-people pie. Would you like my piece?"

Never make offers you don't mean... he ate my piece, and advised me to only invite six people for this eight-people pie. Or four, if they're chocophiles.

When we published the recipe for Chocolate Mousse last year, it contained a typewriter's error that caused people a great deal of trouble. Here is the correct recipe:

WestlandMan Takes Post at Blind Agency

A Westland man, Benjamin J. Pumo, of 31116 Cooley Drive, is the new vocational training and employment consultant for the Metropolitan Society for the Blind.

Pumo, 44, assumes his new position with the Torch Drive agency after being with Goodwill Industries of Toledo, O., where he was director of personnel and rehabilitation service.

He is a graduate of Rutgers University and received his master's degree in rehabilitation from New York University.

Charles F. McLaughlin, president of MSB, in announcing the appointment, said that the society plans to expand its service to include vocational training and placement consultant along with its present services, which include mobility training for children, braille instruction, casework, consultation and self-care counseling.

Pumo is married and the father of two children.
