WILLIAM D. YOUNG

throws away the fortune which had been carefully amassed for him, goes to the big city to live his narcissistic life, leeches on the sympathy of women who include ever present television panelists and finally die in a toiletatory of self-examination.

The production, adapted to the stage by the Court Theatre's Tom Darnell, is taken from a novel written by the well-known cartoonist Jules Feiffer.

The Court Theatre first drew attention last season when they began to act in the Detroit Art Institute's Kresge Court. With success they have moved to larger quarters at the Detroit Waldorf School for their second season.

"Harry" is an adult drama and is not recommended for children's entertainment by the sponsors.
