so me home-grown apricos for your table. Michigan State University researchers have found that painting the trunk of young apricot trees with latex-based white paint helps keep the southwest side of the trunk from becoming very warm on sunny days in late fall and winter and then suffering because of night-time freezes. Alternate freezing and thaving injures the bark and wood and permits wooddestroying fungit to gain entrance and cause a large canker.

MSU scientists warm orchard men against using oil-based paint containing turpentine or oil which would kill or seriously in-jure the trees. White-wast formulas were tried but will not less throughout the winter and will give inade-nuts coverage of the
