

Romney and Hart Applaud Sharing Hour

Want to Give Real Service? Try Becoming a Foster Parent

Governor George Romney and U.S. Senator Philip A. Hart have warmly endorsed the Spring appeals of America's great religious groups for support of their overseas relief programs.

These appeals are the Protestant "One Great Hour of Sharing" and the Catholic "Bishop's Overseas Aid Fund" appeal, both of which were observed in churches in Michigan and throughout the country on Sunday, March 5, and the "United Jewish Appeal," a continuing effort with special emphasis at this period of the year.

Through these independent but common-purpose efforts, it is possible to provide relief and rehabilitation for millions of the world's homeless, hungry and destitute. Among those aided are victims of man-made and natural disasters: war, flood, famine, earthquake and hurricane, refugees fleeing oppression and political upheaval, and those chronically undernourished and underprivileged.

In letters to Church World Service and Catholic Relief Services, the overseas relief agencies of Protestant and Catholic faiths, and to the United Jewish Appeal, made public simultaneously in New York today, Gov. Romney said:

"Again, it is my privilege to recognize and congratulate the three faiths for their efforts to help the less fortunate around the world. These efforts demonstrate anew that brotherhood in action is the key to self-fulfillment."

Senator Hart said:

"When one lives in an affluent society, it is sometimes hard to remember that others are without food, without clothing, without medicine and shelter. Happily, America has always extended her hand to those less fortunate—and one of the most joyful examples is the effort of Church World Service, Catholic Relief Services and United Jewish Appeal."

The wide-eyed young man pictured here with his rishish beard might be delivering an invitation for families wishing to make a really meaningful contribution to society.

He's one of the thousands of youngsters who have been placed in foster homes by the Michigan Children's Aid Society, which has its state headquarters at Farmington.

And his brightness suggests he received a lot of love from the family that took care of him until he was ready to be adopted.

More families with love to give are always needed. And Phyllis Cornell, director of case work for the society, suggests that taking care of such a youngster—usually for a period of a few weeks or months—might be ideal for a service-minded couple anxious to "do something important."

"In considering foster parents," Miss Cornell said, "people tend to think of the fine families that take baby after baby into their homes over a period of years."

"Such families are wonderful. We need more of them. But being a foster parent might not always be a long-term project," she added.

"Taking care of a baby headed for adoption could be a very meaningful experience for a woman who doesn't get much satisfaction from bridge or club work."

"Or a mother, planning to return to work or school after her children start school, might find she'd like to try the project when her youngest is three or four—past the toddler stage but not ready for kindergarten."

Most of the children who come through the Children's Aid Society are preadolescents, and the youngsters who will be placed in permanent homes when they can be matched with the right parents, Miss Cornell said.

The society's 16 branches all over the state made a total of 769 placements of children last year. Some of them took place before the baby was six weeks old.

"But there are many cases," Miss Cornell said, "in which permission for adoption is not given quickly. And cases of birth defects or physical handicaps, which cause longer delays—perhaps indefinite ones."

For such babies, there's nothing more vital to a good start in life than a loving and stimulating home, she added.

Many such homes may be located in this area, Miss Cornell believes, but their occupants have never thought of being foster families.

Those that would like to think about are urged to call Mrs. Hattie Bailey at Children's Aid.

Teens Jam Church Hall for Panel Talk on Race Relations

By KAY SWANSON
Secretary, Livonia Human Relations Council

"Prejudice Must Be Taught," the title of a song from the musical South Pacific, set the theme for a panel discussion and dialogue conducted by teenagers from the Archbishop's Committee on Human Relations Sunday evening at St. Edith's Roman Catholic Church.

The church social hall was filled with an overflow crowd of about 300 teenagers and adults from Livonia, Plymouth, Northville, Southfield, and Detroit to hear the intended panel had to say about civil rights.

The theme was chosen by a steering committee of teenagers from each of the four Livonia high schools who took responsibility for motivating the evening program in their schools. The committee worked with the Livonia Citizens for Better Human Relations, sponsors of the event.

Moderator Homer McClary, kicked off the discussion by asking panelist Ann Williams the question: "Do parents consciously teach their children prejudice?"

The reply, in essence, was that no one is born prejudiced. It is taught, not always by open hatred of another group or race, but more often by subtle comments or expressions which are absorbed by the child.

Panelist Ron Wilson spoke on housing and declared that no one, regardless of skin color, is going to buy his house to purposely defuse his own prejudice. He pointed out that the best education is available where the best housing is and that those who try "education in the house" are the Negro's problem are the same people who deny him.
