

"The Diamond Look" ... Sparkler for Spring

If diamonds are a girl's best friend, the same may be said of "The Diamond Look" in hairstyles, the new Official Hair Fashion Committee trend for Spring. Feminine, flattering, this variation is a gem of a style for daytime, with its tall, slender silhouette, its soft side width, its nothing-nape. It's a jewel of a design when, for evening, a hairpiece is added to accent the overall diamond effect!

If you have changed your hair color and now, your hairpiece doesn't match — bring it to Jean's. We will tint or blend your hairpiece to match your hair color.

Pastor Defines 'Commitment'

The Rev. Orville Bell

In addition, the Cubs announced that all interested were invited to the Cub Scout "Derby Day" picnic to be held June 11 at Farmington Park.

Award Given To Glen Mingo

Glen Mingo, 29531 Pipers Lane, Farmington, was awarded a blue Founders' Club pin by the Michigan Credit Union League April 22, at a breakfast ceremony in the Staller-Hilton Hotel, Detroit.

Mingo, 42, received the award for helping to organize the Automobile Club of Michigan Employees' Credit Union, 150 Bagley Street, Detroit.

Mingo was the treasurer of the credit union until he resigned to take his present position of assistant treasurer of the Automobile Club of Michigan.

He has been an active worker in the credit union movement for seven years.

He is married and has six children.

The word "committed" is very much a part of the creed at Forest Hills United Missionary Church, 30622 12 Mile Rd.

The church pastor, the Rev. Orville Bell, uses it frequently when he defines the ways of faith.

He says, "I use this term because it means the committing of one's life. Christ came into the world and in the seeking of his disciples he called them unto himself."

"Before they could be of any use to him, they had to commit themselves."

"BY COMMITTED, I mean a commitment to a personal faith in Christ and the teaching of the scriptures."

The pastor believes this fundamentalist doctrine of his church is of great relevance in these troubled times.

"I personally feel that the very fact that I am a fundamentalist in the evangelical school of thought proves that I believe that it adequately meets the needs of people today — IF they will give it the opportunity."

When asked about the designation of his church as "united missionary," the pastor said, "You can call it a missionary church, an evangelical church — it all conveys ambassadors of Christ. Christ has made personal disciples of men."

"And this again involves that personal commitment — it involves the whole personality."

AS AN ORDAINED minister of this denomination, the clergyman dispenses two sacraments — the ordinance of believers' baptism and the sacrament of the Lord's table, as he puts it.

Baptism is by immersion and there is a baptism of the spirit, which is in design with tiered wooden ceilings crossed with heavy arched wooden beams.

Baptism into the church can take place at any age. Depending on his maturity, development and faith, a child could be baptized when quite young.

Pastor Bell was brought up in the United Missionary Church and has two brothers who are also ministers — the Rev. Clinton Bell, who fills a pulpit in Zion, Ill., and Dr. Ross H. Bell, an ordained doctor who is superintendent of the church hospital in Nigeria, West Africa.

He would like to see his own two sons, David, 20, and Douglas, 10, become ministers, but comments, "Unless they have the personal conviction, it is best they follow their own persuasions."

THE PASTOR is a newcomer to the United States, having been born north of Toronto, Canada. He has been here since 1963. He attended Ontario Bible Seminary and was ordained in 1959 while serving a church in Kitchener, Ontario. He must live here five years before he can apply for citizenship.

He describes his U.S. ministry as a "challenge," but does not find much basic difference between people of this country and his own.

ONE OF THE HIGH spots of Mr. Bell's life was his tour in 1958 of missions in West Africa, Italy, Egypt, India, the Holy Land and Jamaica. With his 20-year service in both city and rural churches, this has given him a more sophisticated approach to the pastoral life.

But his fundamental faith in the Bible, translated with stark simplicity into his everyday life.

He thinks this can best be done, he says, "by expression of it in your daily life. If a person is leading a committed life, it can't help but affect his pattern of living."

"True the average person 'believes.' But that belief isn't a 'saving faith.' Many can accept the historical facts of the scripture, but do not translate them into everyday living."

With its morning and evening services on Sunday and its midweek services on Wednesdays, his church attempts to lead its people into the Christian life seven days a week.

"We urge our people to come to all these services," he says. "After all, of a given Sunday service, all one gets of the real message is perhaps 20 minutes."

In his own Sunday messages, Pastor Bell always works from a Biblical text, using current issues as illustrative material.

"The Bible is our textbook," he comments. "We pride ourselves in being students of the Word."

He believes the true Christian must renew and nourish his faith in this word through daily devotion.

It is apparent from his conversation, that the pastor practices what he preaches. His Bible must be well-worn judging from his familiarity with what it contains.

As a man of this type faith, the minister deprecates what he calls "Today's complacency."

"We feel we just don't need personal faith because we are so self-sufficient."

"It's all tied up in a personal, committed faith in Christ."

Women Take Step Toward Ecumenism

Approximately 100 Protestant and Catholic women participated in a step forward in the direction of ecumenism in a program presented by the Farmington First Presbyterian Church Women's Association. Members of the association invited their Catholic women friends to a brunch in Fellowship Hall to hear Sister Christopher.

Sister Christopher, of St. Alexander's Parish, is a teacher of religion to young people from kindergarten through high school age. She also teaches inquiry and scripture classes to adults of the parish.

She spoke about the needs of all Christians to remove confusion and misunderstanding among the laity of different Christian traditions and to nourish understanding and appreciation for the faith and worship of each others churches.

A film strip—one of a newly released series narrated and produced by Thomas S. Klise—was shown. The strip in sound and color illustrated with modern religious art drawings was developed by Klise, a Catholic layman, who feels the need to encourage and make known to the world what Vatican II Council has called the laity to understand and respond to in all areas of life: racism, ecumenism, poverty etc.
