

Schoolcraft Steps Up Construction Projects

A series of construction projects—immediate and long-range—including the college library and a greenhouse and arboretum, were approved by the Schoolcraft College Board of Trustees.

Trustees approved an administration request that a consulting architectural firm be hired to plan development of expanded library facilities. Dr. Eric J. Brander, Schoolcraft president, told trustees the present library will be inadequate to accommodate a student body of 7,500 expected on campus within five years.

Trustees also approved a recommendation by the administration that the development of a greenhouse and arboretum be started this year with the construction and equipping of a greenhouse. The facility will be used primarily in the biology program and was initially requested by the college's biology department.

The Board authorized the expenditure of $8,000 during the coming school year to erect the greenhouse and to provide other equipment and material needed for the first phase of the project.

Three change orders affecting construction projects already underway were approved by the Board. One authorized the relocation of a language laboratory from the library to the new liberal arts classroom building on which construction has just begun.

The other change orders authorized removal and stockpiling of additional top soil at the site of the south parking lot, now being developed, and of relocating utility lines in the administration building where a remodeling program has begun.

Trustees also approved purchase of an $8,050 computer to be used in the electronics instructional program, and okayed purchase of carpeting for office spaces in the remodeling administration building.

Growing Cities Push for Census

Pressure built today on the Senate to pass legislation enabling suburban boom towns to conduct a new census qualifying them for big chunks of state aid.

Livonia officials estimated the city would pick up $642,569 more in sales tax, infant

Mayor Harvey W. Moelke's bill before, has now changed its position, favoring it, and R.P. Louis Schmidt started polling suburban Senators in Lansing yesterday.

He said the census brings the population figures up to date would probably cost $25,000 as a one-shot item in exchange for the bonanza League, which opposed the state aid which is based on per capita distribution. Cities and townships expected to benefit most from the population boom if a new census is taken are Warren, Livonia, Ann Arbor, Southfield and Taylor Township.
