

Famed Art Designs Go on Display Nankin Players

Seek A Home

Producing spectacular entertainment to dazzle royal audiences was the business of Inigo Jones. For nearly half a century Jones devised intricate stage machinery, created supernatural effects and extravagant costumes for the famous masques in the courts of King James I and King Charles I of England.

Beginning Friday, Sept. 15, 119 "Festival Designs by Inigo Jones" will be displayed at the Detroit Institute of Arts. On loan from the Chatsworth Collection of the Duke of Devonshire, these are master drawings in ink, wash and occasional color. Five stage set models and two costume reconstructions will also be shown in this revival of 17th century court life.

Long known to scholars and theatrical researchers, this famous collection now is making its first appearance in the United States under the direction of the International Exhibitions Foundation.

The Nankin Mills Players are homeless.

With a full season coming up, and no building or school available for rehearsals, set construction, and general meetings, the future looks dim.

President of the group, Tom Kinjorski and board members Bill and Jackie Amperse, Jean Vatterstian, Celine Werner, Jerry Smith, Milo Jordan, and Dee Giddings are trying to solve the problem. The search for a building to lease or rent, such as an unoccupied school or building in the Westland, Garden City, or Livonia area has been under way for almost a year, to no avail.

The group learned that the "Wayne Civic Players" had found a new home and are hoping that someone reading this column may be able to give them a lead.

Plans for the coming season include a drama, "Patterns" written by Rod Serling and adapted for the stage by James Beach, to be presented November 10 and 11. The cast will be selected and the production site—

The Players have a full season planned, with their second production, "Never Too Late" scheduled for presentation in February, and a third production scheduled for May.

If necessary, the Players will continue to rehearse in private homes and construct sets in backyards and garages.

Call Tom Kinjorski, GA 7-1398, or write to: The Nankin Mills Players, Box 2135, Livonia, if you can help.

Schoolcraft Expands Its Music Program

An expanded music program, that will include the first time instruction in instrumental music, is being offered at Schoolcraft College this fall according to Wayne Dunlap, chairman of the Humanities Division.

Dunlap said that in addition to instrumental music, the department will offer instruction in both freshman and sophomore level music theory and in music at the sophomore level.

"These changes are part of the normal development of our music curriculum," Dunlap explained. "Our objective is to provide music majors with two full years of music prerequisites before they transfer to a baccalaureate college."

Final clearance in the long-planned instrumental program came last week when the college Board of Trustees approved purchase of a dozen instruments on which bids had been requested. The award, in the amount of $4,310, was made to Hammel Music Co., Livonia, lowest of three bidders.

The instruments, Dunlap explained, are those normally purchased by students. They include a series of drums, a group of woodwind instruments, tuba, French horn, string bass, cello and viola.

"Our emphasis in the instrumental program will be at the orchestral level," Dunlap said. "At this stage in the program we will concentrate on small ensembles as we did during our successful summer music school."

"Acquisition of the instruments makes it possible for us to offer Music 141 and 142 during this coming year and will also make a direct contribution to the summer music program next year. We had to borrow a number of these instruments this summer."

Dunlap, who is also conductor of the Plymouth Symphony, will teach the instrumental program.

A newcomer to the Schoolcraft music department this year is Donald Morelock, a native of Oklahoma.

"THE MOD, MOD WORLD of Fashions." Livonia. Music of a Garden City group, The Midnight Sunns, will accompany the billed as a psychedelic fashion show, will be presented at 7:40 p.m. on Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Terrace Theatre.
