

Residents Help Celebrate

WELL-WISHERS GREETED each other gaily at the birthday open house. Many saw people they haven't seen in a long time. Guests included local officials, representatives of the service clubs, senior citizens and residents who wanted to wish the paper a happy birthday.

THE 80TH BIRTHDAY open house offered many guests an opportunity to see how a printing job is done. Nellie-Fillmore, Enterprise & Observer linotype operator, explains how a linotype machine works to some of Friday's guests.

MRS. WILLIAM LANCASTER stops to sign the guest book at the 80th birthday open house. As soon as she was through, Mrs. Luke Taylor (in back) pinned a flower to her coat. Mrs. Lancaster arrived at the party with a big bouquet of roses she brought from her garden.

OF INTEREST to many guests was the display of historical artifacts loaned for the birthday open house by the Farmington Historical Society. Pictured is a mounting of old-fashioned door hinges.

The Farmington Enterprise & Observer office put on its best bib and tucker and decorated the office with flowers and silver for the paper's 80th birthday celebration Friday and Saturday.

The staff, also in its best bib and tucker, greeted dozens of well-wishers from 4 to 6 p.m., many of whom had their first opportunity to meet Observer Publisher Philip H. Power.

The party overflowed from the front office to the print shop at the back, where Plant Manager Vic Howard was kept busy giving lessons in how a print shop works.

All in all, they were two happy days and now we're looking forward to our next 80 years.

PHILIP H. POWER publisher of the Observer, with two members of Lee Peel's Journalism class.

For "after five" wear, well-matched hairpieces . . . those great discoverers . . . add extra glamour to even the most glamorous basic coiff. Here are two beautiful examples. Big, bold curl formations partner extraordinarily well with delicate little bows when a very special occasion calls for a very special coiff. On the other hand, a different mood, one of casually relaxed beauty can best be enhanced with an all-girl "fall upon fall" accented with even more enchantment . . . an all-girl bow for a sweet, lovely ingenuit.
