

Freezer Buying Tips

For some time now I have so I thought this might be a fine time to begin... buying meat for the freezer First of all remember that there is no such thing as an individual buying by wholesale from a bulk distributor. Honest distributors admit that they can't compete in "economy" with buying at retail when cuts are on sale.

The real advantage in buying in bulk is convenience, not economy. In fact, some states prohibit the use of the term "wholesale" or "wholesale lots" when you make a individual bulk meat sale—only, say it is misleading advertising.

There are several considerations which shoppers should make before buying from a bulk distributor. First of all check up on the company with whom you are dealing—never buy unless you do. The Food Inspection Division, the Michigan Department of Agriculture and local Better Business Bureau will help you do this.

These agencies say that one of the biggest reasons why shoppers get "cheated" in making bulk sales is that they don't know what to look for in quality meat—they don't know the characteristics of quality meat. Secondly, you should know and understand what grades the company is carrying—and give priority to Federal grades, particularly if you are not sure of yourself in recognizing quality.

Consider only the ads and the meat carrying USDA and the name of the grade—such as US Prime, US Choice, US Good.

Be cautious of individual company grades which actually mean nothing to you as an individual.

New Booklet Tells Of Versatile Metal

What single material is used to make tank armor, electrical wire, home siding, kitchen foil, jet planes, bridges, tinse, sea ships, paint and railroad cars? You're right if you guessed aluminum, which according to a new booklet published by The Aluminum Association, is the world's most versatile metal.

The COLORFUL 32-page booklet, called "Uses of Aluminum," describes the countless applications of the metal and explains how aluminum's versatility has made it the second most widely used metal although it wasn't produced commercially until the late 19th century.

Once a laboratory curiosity costing $545 a pound, today aluminum goes into almost everything, from skyscraper walls to cans and bottle caps. The reason for aluminum's versatility lies in its unique combination of properties, the booklet says. Aluminum is produced in many high-strength alloys, yet it has only about one-third the weight of copper or steel. It can be shaped into almost any form, from intricate extruded parts to paper thin foil, and it doesn't rust.

AMID THE THOUSANDS of facts about aluminum contained in the booklet are many that come as something of a surprise to those who normally think of aluminum in terms of cookware, siding and storm windows. For example: • Pound for pound, aluminum has twice the electrical conductivity of copper and is used for more than 90 per cent of the overhead transmission systems in this country.

• The Saturn V rocket, which will carry American astronauts to the moon, will contain about 500,000 pounds of aluminum in its two stages. • Aluminum actually becomes stronger, instead of brittle like some other metals, at super-cold temperatures ranging down to 400 degrees below zero. That's why it's often used to make tanks that store liquefied gases for rocket fuel.

A free copy of the booklet "Uses of Aluminum" can be obtained by writing directly to The Aluminum Association, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Artists Display Top Exhibits At Livonia Mall

Outstanding artists from the Metropolitan Detroit area as well as outstate are displaying their wares and demonstrating their skills in a 10-day Artists Market in the Livonia Mall. The Market opened with the three-day third anniversary sale, and will continue through Saturday, Oct. 28 under the supervision and direction of the Market's supervising artist, Sam Field, prominent artist and gallery owner from the north-west Detroit area.

"We plan to bring the arts to the people and not the people to the arts," said Field, in telling of the plans for the show.

"We will have more than 600 paintings on display, all done by award winning artists," he said. "There will be exhibits from almost 100 artists who we consider to be the best in this section."

Field indicated the Market will have professional artists available at all times during the normal store hours of the Mall to evaluate paintings of amateurs.

"If you have a painting you would like to have evaluated," he stated, "just bring it to the Market during the normal store hours and we'll give you a candid opinion."

The Market will include demonstrations of clay, weaving, Snapdragons Require Cover For Winter

Do you know that if you live in a mild climate your plants of snapdragons are likely to winter and come up again, bigger and better, next spring? Even in colder areas a heavy covering of litter often will save the plants for another year.

Snapdragons act this way because they aren't really annuals—we just treat them as if they were.

wood carving, portrait artists and leather working.

The list of demonstrations and those to charge includes: jewelry making—Andrew Reid and Charles Brown; lapidary—East Side Rock Club; weaving—Jan Jackson; oil painting—Betty Mallow and June Weidel; miniature painting—Andree Levy; silhouette cutting—Henry Niles; portrait artists—George Provart, Jesse Fowler, Nancy Urvang, Colin Allen and Jose Ponce; sculpture—Jean Gaugy; glass painting—Esther Gluklick; and plastics—American Handicraft Co.
