Women On The Go Teaching Art Is Labor Of Love

Marjorie Becker is glad she teaches art for all kinds of reasons.

A lot of them are tied up in her belief that art can and should be an integral part of each stage of life—to the young a happy means of expression, to the busy adult a satisfying implementation of living, to the older person a worthwhile filler of long hours.

BUT BEYOND this, Livonia's head of elementary art education sees her subject as a tremendously important part of the whole education picture.

"It's the part of school where we can encourage individuality," she said.

"In so many parts of a child's schooling, we must teach him to conform. In art we can lead him to think for himself, and this is a great thing to carry over into other subjects.

"We are living in an age when we must push scientific knowledge and training if we are to survive as a people," she added.

"But because of this we need more than ever the understanding that comes with the arts."

IN TEACHING art to young children, Mrs. Becker said, she and her staff of teaching consultants try to stress good design and keep it always before the youngsters.

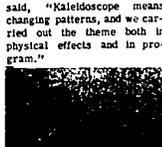

But they only guide, she added, and try to help each child discover for himself what is good in color and design.

And that brings her to another reason she's glad to teach art—the joy of being on hand for this discovery.

Mrs. Becker, a teacher in the Livonia school system since 1931 and elementary art coordinator for 15 years, recently completed the large-sized task of bringing some of her ideas and those of her consultants to art instructors from four counties.

STEVENS HIGH School was the host school for art teachers during the regional educational conferences early this month, and Marjorie Becker was in charge of the program. The theme was Kaleidoscope '67.

"To an artist," Mrs. Becker said, "sketching and drawing while bringing patterns, and we carried out the theme both in physical effects and in program."

WHEN NOT DIRECTING the art education of Livonia's small fry, Mrs. Becker likes water color painting—she has had several shows and is past president of the Three Cities Art Club—and collecting antiques. "Good design is lasting."

ART EDUCATION HEAD—Mrs. Marjorie Becker, coordinator of elementary art instruction in Livonia schools, and a friend who came into being in her department.

The students at Stevens, she said, add to the decor by setting up lights that move and changed patterns, from moving water reflections to gesture dancing that made moving light and shadow.

FOR THE program, she reported, there was an address by Robert Iglehart, chairman of the University of Michigan art department, a panel discussion on art's changing patterns, and about 50 workshops to cover every phase of art education that Marjorie Becker could think of.

"I was delighted later," she said, "that several of the teachers came up afterward and said they thought there were parts of the program designed just for them. That's what we were trying to do."

IF she needed additional knowledge of what art can mean to the young, she gets it by visiting her son and daughter-in-law and four grandchildren in Northville.

Mrs. Becker thinks their home, with its school art work decorating the walls at times, exemplifies the increased awareness on the part of American families for children's need to express their individuality.

"Parents seem more understanding now, of the part we are trying to play in education," she added.

And that's one more reason to enjoy being an art teacher.

Bentley Teacher To Speak

Daniel B. Kachnowski, co-leader of the U.S. history team teaching program at Bentley High School, Livonia, will be the guest speaker at the monthly meeting of the West Detroit Business and Professional Women's Club.

The meeting will be held Monday, Nov. 20 at 7 p.m. in the Sheraton-Cadillac hotel.

His address will be in "Anatomy of a Free People," a study of the struggle of men and women in their quest for a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people."

The program is part of the BPW Know Your America Week, Nov. 19 to 24. Legislative chairman, Mrs. Myrtle Luke, of Windsor, Ont. is program chairman for the evening.

Kachnowski received his bachelor of science and master of arts degrees from the University of Detroit and has been teaching for nine years. Before joining the Livonia school system, he was assistant with De Lassalle College and then was chairman of the social studies department at Austin Preparatory School for Boys in Detroit.

The West Detroit BPW Club is affiliated with the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs which is comprised of 177,000 business and professional women.

Sociologist Will Speak To AAUW

The Plymouth Branch of the American Association of University Women will meet Thursday, Nov. 16 at 7:30 p.m. in the Plymouth Junior High West.

Dr. Hyman Rodman of the Merrill-Palmer Institute will speak on "Testing Values in a Changing Society."

Dr. Rodman is a Sociologist and currently edits "Social Problems"—the official journal of the Society for the Study of Social Problems: Marriage, Family, and Society.

Dr. Rodman has just been appointed consultant to the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders and has had many books published.

Mrs. David Thompson, chairman of the coffee hour will be assisted by Mrs. James Surratt, Mrs. Elden Zang, Mrs. Elizabeth Krinkel and Mrs. Brian Kidston.

Circle Installs New Officers

Mrs. Rose Wilson has been installed for the second year as regent for the Daughters of Isabella, Our Lady of Fatima Circle #764.

Eleanor Stasiak, state treasurer, presided at the recent installation, which followed a pot-luck dinner in the K. of C. Hall on Ford Road, Garden City.

Visiting regents on hand for the occasion included Ruth Lorrin, of Our Lady of the Rosary, Lincoln Park; Ann Simons, of St. Joan of Arc, Dearborn; and Gene Mack, of St. Maria Goretti, Detroit.

Doctor in the Kitchen

by W.W. Bower, M.D.
Consultant, National Dairy Council

Doctor in the kitchen? What's a doctor doing in the kitchen?

Kitchens are for home-makers—cooks; not doctors! Well, now, let's just see. Kitchens are certainly for cooking and otherwise preparing food, aren't they? Well, then, isn't food a basic essential for living, along with water and air? And isn't the right food, properly selected, important and indeed essential, for good health, vigor and fitness? I've always thought so.

SO MAYBE A doctor in the kitchen might be of some use in helping the homemaker with her important job of feeding her family correctly, economically, and happily, and with the least wear and tear on herself. Not by telling her how to run her house. She knows about that. But in keeping her up to the minute in the fast-moving world of nutritional research.

New knowledge is being developed all the time by thousands of nutritional and clinical research workers, and reported in more journals than the homemaker could possibly read. Wouldn't it be helpful to have a stand-by source of such information in your kitchen once a week?

SO, may I look in? KITCHENS, I regret to say, are also places where home-makers get hurt. They deal with sharp knives, jagged cans, hot utensils and other electric appliances. Water or grease gets spilled on floors and causes falls. Escaping gas may explode; hot grease may start fires. Broken glassware may cause serious cuts. Perhaps the doctor's advice might be helpful in knowing what to do when such situations develop—or, still better to keep them from occurring. With your permission, madam?

MANY QUESTIONS arise in the course of a week's meal planning and preparation. And over the bridge table, or at the lunchroom, many opinions about food are expressed, some correct, some not.

There are, for example, homemakers who even wonder whether proteins and carbohydrates should be eaten at the same meal. Let's get the record straight. There is absolutely no reason for such concern. The notion that proteins and carbohydrates should not be eaten at the same meal arose from a dietary fad more than thirty years ago, and still pops up once in a while. Indeed, most foods naturally contain both of these nutrients.

In nutrition, there are plenty of questions. Most people don't know the facts. For this reason, I hope you'll join me in the kitchen next week, and for many more weeks to come. We'll talk common-sense nutrition for you and your family.

Good day—and good eating!

Sorority Offers Research Grants

Alpha Delta Kappa, an International women's sorority for women in education, will offer three $4,000 grants over the next six years to promote arts and humanities research.

Mrs. H.P. Stewart, president of Delta Epsilon chapter here, said that the grants are offered to interest women who have completed their master's degree work and are in cultural or educational fields. She added that the guidelines for the sponsored research were very broad.

Interested women should contact Mrs. Stewart, at 261-3826.
