

Livonia Blondes Sport Scottish Kilts

When Mrs. Mary Gummoe of 10750 Laurel, Livonia, returned from her hometown of Strathaven, Scotland, with an authentic tartan for her five-year-old great granddaughter, Dawn, she ran into a slight problem. Mrs. Judi Roberts, Dawn's mother, wanted one too.

On her next visit to Strathaven, a town built around the ancient castle in which Mary Queen of Scots was beheaded, Mrs. Gummoe purchased a second tartan.

The tartan is of the Gordon clan—dark blue and green with a tiny line of yellow running through it.

ONE MUST be granted of official permission to wear a tartan—ancestry traced to determine the correct clan.

At a yearly gathering of the clans no one needs an introduction, the clans are "read" by merely taking note of the distinctive patterns of the tartans.

When Mrs. Gummoe purchased Judi's tartan she asked for something in a plaid.

The clerk looked at her in dismay, surely a native of Scotland knew that the "plaid" is the large piece of material that is thrown over the shoulder of a Scottish Highlander and that when you ask to see skirt material you ask to see "tartan".

BESIDES THE tartans, Mrs. Gummoe provided matched tams and knee high stockings for Mrs. Roberts and Dawn. Mrs. Roberts completed the mother and daughter outfits by making white lace-trimmed blouses.
