Create Room By Upgrading Basement

If you're concerned about the lack of living space in your house, cast your eyes down to the basement and you may find just what you're looking for. Many homeowners overlook the possibilities that a basement has in terms of living space. They see it only as a maze of water pipes, better-ventilated storage and cement blocks.

But, with a little time and effort and the right materials, even a do-it-yourselfer can upgrade the basement into an attractive recreation area or family room.

WHAT MAKES the difference between dreary basement and cheery recreation room are new walls, ceiling, floor, adequate lighting, comfortable furniture, curtains and imaginative decor.

For example, you can give your basement a warm, inviting look with hardboard paneling that covers up cold-looking masonry walls.

There's a wide choice of attractive prefabricated hardboard paneling in wood-grain ranging from light oak to dark teak, textures such as burlap and cane, decorator colors and patterns.

The prefabricated styles require no painting or staining, in high-humidity areas of the basement — such as a laundry room — plastic-surfaced hardboard is exceptionally practical.

IF YOU HAVE a moisture problem in the basement, water-proof the masonry walls first. Then install hardboard paneling over hurring strips with nails or adhesive.

The panels are available in standard 4-by-8-foot sheets grooved for a planted effect, and with a surface that resists dents and won't crack.

Sneezes Are Costly

Those pesky sneezes are costing Americans $100 million a year. That's the price, studies show, that Americans pay their doctors annually for hay fever injection therapy.

Hay fever, reports the Health Insurance Institute, is among the allergies which cost the nation's economy an estimated $200 million a year through time lost from work alone.
