She's Well Trained For Political Work

Dolores Kory studied in college for the community service she now renders.

So the attractive, dark-haired Redford Township resident could well be the perfect answer to the often-heard statement girls don't need college educations—they'll just get married and raise families and do volunteer work.

A few years ago Dolores was a University of Michigan student majoring in economics and minoring in social psychology and mental health.

Today she's the new operational chairman for the 19th Wayne District Republican Committee—and she's been a major contributor in time and talent to the Michigan Association for the Emotionally Disturbed and the Northwest Child Guidance Committee.

IN BETWEEN have been marriage to husband Don, the arrival of daughters Deanna and Donna, now eight and six, and many community activities.

She has enjoyed many forms of volunteer and organization work, but found the greatest satisfaction in her political endeavors.

"There's real excitement in working for your party on a program you believe in," she said, "If you work for a candidate you respect and admire, it can be a short term project that brings great satisfaction."

"I find it a challenge to work with others in a goal we all share. And when things don't go well, there's always more work to be done another time."

DOLORES' current responsibility isn't precisely of the short-term variety. She's dealing with long-range aspects of political endeavor, working with the various groups within the Republican framework in her district.

There are GOP organizations in Redford Township, Northville and Livonia, all part of the 19th district, and part of her job is to coordinate their activities.

Then there are the TARS, or Teen Age Republicans, in Northville and Redford Township, with five groups in the process of organization in Livonia. A Republican club is operating at Madonna College, and one of Dolores' next concerns is a group at Schoolcraft Community College.

Women's GOP organizations also play a big part in the party set-up, and there are clubs for Young Republicans, those under 35.

IN HER NEW CAPACITY, Dolores Kory also has worked with other district chairmen to meet with top officials of Wayne County and Mayor Jerome Cavanagh of Detroit, to look into such issues as possible help the suburban areas might give in staffing the Detroit police force.

She has some occasions to work directly with the state Republican organization, and gives a hand with other volunteers in the district GOP office on Beech-Daily in Redford Township.

That office takes care of such functions as a newsletter for volunteers and dispensing of information about congressmen, representatives, and service agencies.

DOLORES FEELS STRONGLY that involvement in party work is important for all who are interested in good government, and has made this point repeatedly in a class on public affairs she has taught for the "Ladies' Day Out" program at the Northwest YWCA.

"I tell them that major candidates all are chosen at conventions," she said, "so the only way to have an effective voice in picking the candidates you want is by participation at the convention level."

SHE'S FOUND GREAT satisfaction in her work with the Michigan Association for the emotionally disturbed.

"I worked as legislative chairman during hearings when we were trying to get the emotionally disturbed included in the various programs for those who are mentally retarded," she said.

She also was on the executive board of the Northwest Child Guidance Clinic when it relocated from the Wayne County General Hospital to its own quarters.

That move particularly pleased Dolores because it was done with local funds and effort, and she is proud of the fact that Redford Township was the first unit of local government to allocate funds for the clinic.

ANOTHER ACTIVITY of recent years that brought a feeling of fulfillment was service on the Commission on the Status of Women, set up by Gov. George Romney in 1963.

DOLORES KORY ISN'T STOPPING either her service work or her education.

She hopes in her present job to involve more young people in party work because there's so much satisfaction in learning and so many ways that they can be of real help, and more senior citizens because they have so much to offer us and the rewards for them is that they stay young and vital.

On the book learning front she's going forward, too. And since one of her daughters was in nursery school at the Merrill-Palmer Institute, she started working on a master's degree in political science at Wayne State University. The studies are in abeyance for the present, but she plans to complete the work.
