Dualap considers ponderosa pine wood windows "a good insulator" that beips achieve the full thermal insulation required for electrically-heated homes.
He says they also prevent window condensation which can result from the comfortable, healthy, but higher-thansverage indoor humidity that electric heat allows.

HE EXPLAINS that humid air will condense on metal window sash in winter because metal turns cold from outside tem-persures, But this doesn't happen with wood sash.

"Since wood is an effective insulator that doesn't transmit cold there's no condensation or flats, it's kept clear either with insulating dass or storn with insulating dass or storn with its readily available for all homes as stock units of pondersora pine, and with this type of window storm sash is not required except in extreme climates.
