

A Soldier's Letters Bridge The Distance

The endless miles between Farmington and Vietnam spanned for Mrs. Robert Kirsten by some of the most vivid and interesting letters a young wife could hope to receive. Pretty, dark-haired Sally Kirsten, who teaches seventh grade math in Farmington East Junior High, is tremendously proud of her sergeant husband and the important work he does as a radio telephone operator in a tactical operations center near Chu Lai.

She also finds great happiness in him, letters that reveal a remarkably sensitive young man who can describe his strange world of beauty and war with amazing clarity.

NOT LONG after getting to Vietnam last October, he wrote of his fellow GIs in one letter she shared:

"All of these men are great. Each in his own weariness has a certain reverence, a nobility. And if I am here and motivated simply out of respect for these men, then it is enough. 'The world we know' and dream of returning to is very distant. We adjust because it is the ultimate reality for all but the fool. 'The people who object to our presence here do so on intellectual grounds, as they may rightly do. But it is a view based on a luxurious life in which thought processes can develop easily, far from the nakedness of reality and the academic business of existing.'

AND THIS SPRING, on that same theme, Sgt. Kirsten wrote: "Here there is only the great brotherhood of GIs and their humor to offer release from the depression that may easily grow with our position here. There isn't any of the apathy or uncertainty over the state of civil disorder, or tanks or just the petty problems and frustrations. Things are simple and basic. The people and the consequences are real. 'If you savor even the fear, it leaves an impression of reality that is bound to leave a man perhaps a little harder and with a positive perspective to look back upon.'

SALLY and ROBERT KIRSTEN both grew up in Farmington and graduated from Duncel Junior High and Farmington High. They were married last June after Sally graduated from Michigan State University. She's now living with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shaw, on Farmington Road.

Rob, whose family now lives in Birmingham, had two years at MSU and a term at Lawrence Institute of Technology before going into the Army. He has studied engineering and architecture, but at this point is not quite certain of the work he'll do eventually. His letters this year have opened the possibility of some sort of writing career, his wife said. "They are wonderful to read," she added, "and make me feel mine to him must be rather bold. There isn't much to say about going to school."

THEY'LL HAVE A CHANCE to talk over the future—and a few other things—when they get together in Hawaii, next week for Rob's rest and rehabilitation leave. After that, they'll come off the days until the sergeant's discharge, due Oct. 11. A recent interview with Rob, published in the "Army Times," called him "the man in the driver's seat in one of the world's deadliest races." His job, in the strange sort of warfare fought in Vietnam, is to react quickly to bring in support companies when one of the South Infantry companies makes contact with the enemy. "The big difference in this war," that story quoted him as saying, "is the vast American fire superiority. But our firepower is useless without rapid, well-coordinated application."

IN THE MIDST of loneliness and exacting work, Sgt. Kirsten is able to appreciate the great beauty of war-torn Vietnam. In November, he wrote: "I am sitting here on top of a small mountain from which I can see the ocean on one side and a beautiful valley stretching to the mountains in the west."

"I deeply regret that this place is in such an unresolvable situation because it is so beautiful. The sun set with a brilliant palette of colors before the darkness. I stepped out of the gloom. I saw the light in the inspiring sight of the orange sky mirrored by the great glassy mouth of the river that fills half of the valley below."

Co-op To Hold Open House

The Plymouth Cooperative Nursery School will hold its annual open house at 8 p.m. Monday, May 6, in the former Hough School, Warren and Haggerty. The event is designed to acquaint the public and interested parents of the nursery's program for children three to five years of age. The school, now seven years old, is accepting applications for next year, and parents interested in enrolling their youngsters are invited to attend the open house. Further information is available by calling Mrs. Robert Jones, 453-2713, or Mrs. William Smith, 453-1131.

Steam Vegetables

Steaming of vegetables is the ideal way to cook vegetables, say home economists at United States Stamping Co. When cooked in a specially designed steamer, they retain all of the nutrients which boil away when immersed in water.

For the umpteenth time recently, we watched "The Wizard of Oz" on television. As always, a small blonde head was buried in my lap during the scary scenes. Over the years, it's been four different blonde heads buried there, but always I have to hold someone during "The Wizard."

It isn't just Judy Garland and company, either. I remember when the youngest was so frightened at a children's theater production that she almost missed her sister's performance as one of the witch's cats. The young cast was convinced the Cowardly Lion got his courage by searing her.

Anyway, I wondered aloud why, with so much violence on television, that story is such a perennial hair-raiser.

"It's because there's a little girl," explained the ones who are now big girls and beyond the terrors of "Oz."

"And a witch," added the small one, and ducked again as that being came into view.

"I haven't had to hide my eyes once," bragged the medium-sized one, but she looked a mite apprehensive.

The day is not far off, I suppose, when everyone will be able to watch "The Wizard of Oz" with complete composure.

Come to think of it, I'm not looking forward to that day at all.

BOOKS BY THE STACK — It's that time of year when members of the American Association of University Women turn their thoughts to used book sales to raise money for women's fellowships. The Plymouth AAUW branch will hold its sale in the Plymouth Credit Union, 500 South Harvey, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday to Saturday, May 2 to 4, and members who get together for a sorting bee recently were, from left, Mrs. Coralyn Riley, Livonia; Mrs. Wendell Smith, Plymouth; Mrs. Jack Maas, Northville; Mrs. John W. Anderson, Plymouth and Mrs. Douglas Whitaker, Plymouth. The Farmington branch of the AAUW has begun collecting books for a fall sale, and a special box in the Farmington library has been provided for those who wish to make donations.

Easter Seal Day Camp To Expand

The annual Summer Day Camp for crippled children sponsored by the Easter Seal Society of Western Wayne County will open this year on June 24 and run through Aug. 16. Citro Minella, Special Education teacher at Hilbert Junior High School, Redford Union, has been appointed director.

Carl E. Licht, society president, said the extended season is possible because the Cherry Hill School District is using the first six weeks of the basic Easter Seal summer program as a special summer session for the boys and girls attending classes for the orthopedically handicapped in that district during the school year. Joseph F. Barnes is serving on the camp staff part-time to coordinate the agency-school programs.

Licht emphasizes that the cooperation of the school district broadens the program without affecting its basic purposes of helping children to maintain the gains they have made during the school year in an atmosphere of recreation and fun, such as that enjoyed by their peers.

"REGISTRATION is open to all physically handicapped boys and girls throughout Western Wayne County," he points out.

Party Funds Aid Retarded

The Livonia Woman's City Club will hold its annual luncheon and card party at 12 noon Thursday, May 2, in St. Andrew's Episcopal Church. Tickets may be purchased at the door or by calling 422-1729, and proceeds will go to continue the club's work with retarded children in Livonia. Heading arrangements for the event are Mrs. Chae Weiss, general chairman, Mrs. John Chor, co-chairman, Mrs. Harold Gibson, ticket chairman and Mrs. Howard Cossin, food chairman.
