

Pamela Trombley Wed Tell Manufacturer If A New Dress Goofs In Candlelight Rites

In a recent candlelight ceremony in the First Presbyterian Church of Farmington, Pamela Trombley was united in marriage to Rodney J. Cooper Jr.

The Rev. Robert Sawyer officiated. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Trombley of Leeland Road, Farmington, and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Rodney Cooper Sr., of San Leandro, Calif.

THE BRIDE, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor-length white lace empire gown. She carried a Victorian bunch bouquet containing stephanotis, white freesia, pink rose bud and baby's-breath.

Barbara Trombley, assisting her sister as maid of honor, was dressed in a rosy pink gown and carried the same style bouquet which included white daisies, purple statice, pink rose buds and baby's-breath with a matching floral headpiece.

Herbert Roberts, of Detroit, was best man.

After a brief honeymoon trip to northern Michigan, the newlyweds flew to the San Francisco area where the bride was introduced at a large reception to her husband's family and friends.

After his release from military service in August, the couple will live in California, where he will continue his pre-medical studies.

What do you do about a dress or other garment you find hasn't performed as you expected although you followed care instructions on the hangtag?

What you should do is let the manufacturer know, suggests Mrs. Ruth Ann Wilson, extension clothing specialist of The Pennsylvania State University.

THE FIRST PERSON to see about an unsatisfactory clothing item might be the salesclerk to the store where you bought it. Tell her that you followed the instructions for care and handling and then explain why you feel the merchandise isn't what you expected. If she can't help you, then go to the customer service department in the store.

A letter to the manufacturer or the fiber company, explaining how the merchandise has failed, may be advisable. Most manufacturers care about their labels and want to protect them. Many are conducting testing programs to help assure consumer satisfaction.

BEFORE BUYING clothing, read hangtags and labels for information on serviceability, colorfastness, and resistance to shrinkage. This is just as important as considering appearance, texture, and fashion of a garment. Use the item only for the purpose for which it was intended. When you do these things, you can help to eliminate possible dissatisfaction with the merchandise.

Friendly blend: latest fruit juice to take on the sparkling flavor of the cranberry is the prune. A delicious cranberry-prune juice drink is now on the grocer's shelves.
