Travel Centers Prepare For Summer Work

LANSING -- The Michigan State Highway Commission long recognized nationally for its ambitious travel information program, is ready to extend another warm welcome to vacationers.

Some 800,000 persons are expected to stop this year for free travel counseling service at the Commission's eight travel information centers, an increase of about 100,000.

The centers are located on main highways at six points of entry--New Buffalo, Monroe, Port Huron, South St. Marie, Ironwood and Menominee--and at Clare and Mackinaw City. By late summer, a ninth center will be in operation on I-69 near Coldwater.

FOR SEVERAL WEEKS, maintenance crews have been busy repairing and redecorating the information center buildings and grooming the surrounding picnic grounds.

Literature racks, filled during the winter with information on winter sports, have been stocked with summer folders, and literature storage shelves are being restocked, literally by the truckload.

Last year, travelers selected and carried away more than 2.5 million maps, directories, schedules, brochures and booklets telling about travel attractions, how to reach them and where to stay, and it is expected that the 1968 total will exceed three million.

The literature is provided by state, regional and local agencies and organizations, including the Michigan Tourist Council, Department of Conservation, the regional tourist associations and chambers of commerce, and the operators of travel facilities and attractions.

THE JOB OF collecting and distributing literature is a big chore, requiring roller conveyors, a lift truck, wooden skids, a van-type truck -- and muscle.

Meanwhile, interviews are being conducted for seasonal information center personnel, to be hired in June when the centers switch to 12-hour operation seven-day-a-week operation through early September.

Most of the seasonal employees are college girls, many of whom have worked in the centers for several years under the direction of year-round center supervisors.

Their principal responsibility is to make travelers at home in Michigan, by extending a friendly greeting and by suggesting interesting things to do and see.

In this way, the Commission is hopeful that travelers will be encouraged to stay another day or two, and to return again to Michigan.

The Commission has operated travel information centers since 1936 when its first center and perhaps the first in the U.S., was opened near New Buffalo.

Many other states, now aware that tourism is among their top industries, are following Michigan's lead.

Here's Gal You Can 'See Through'

ANN ARBOR--Her name is TAM. She's 5-foot-8, weighs 100 pounds, and measures 36-24-37. You can meet her at The University of Michigan's Museums Building.

TAM stands for Transparent Anatomical Manikin and she's one lady you can see right through.

TAM is made of crystal-clear plastic over bones, muscles and nerves are all apparent. Her central interior lighted section is cross-hatched so each bone is visible, even behind a bone or layer of muscle.

Irving Reitman, director of the Exhibit Museum, ordered TAM in 1965 from the Richard Rush Studio in Chicago, the first order for the first transparent female model manufactured in the United States.

It took three years and a $100,000 expenditure by the Rush Studio to produce TAM. New materials and techniques only recently made possible a three-dimensional full-sized medical manikin which shows the inside of the female body intact. Past manikins have been of the "take-apart" variety.

TAM's figure is made of two major outside sections, a front and a back, with the left arm the only other cast part. It is assembled into one complete unit with a steel support inside.
