ROLLING DOWN THE RIVER

By Bob Kettler

So on this Tuesday morning we came into our Studebaker and we feel like one big icicle except in spots where our teeth are chattering. We're very thankful, too, that there's no installations due on the heating system and that Mr. Convoluted Gas is at peace, at least temporarily, because in our book there's nothing like central heating on a very brisk morning. It's nice and warm in our office and we begin to thaw and are counting our fingers to see if any are missing, when in comes our Painting and Pumping expert who knows more about his job than a Republican knows about what's wrong with the country. We give him a big hello and say "It's cold." "Cold," says he, "a balmy morning like this cold! Why up in Minnesota where we once spent a winter it was so cold that when we got up in the morning we find the thermometer had come down from the wall and crawled under the kitchen stove!"

After that he finishes his business and goes away but we wonder how come the help is so much smarter than the boss. We figure it out on paper, we own a home, he owns a home; we drive a Studebaker, he drives a Studebaker; we work 12 hours a day, he works 8 hours a day and then gets in his Studebaker and goes home and doesn't worry about taxes, turnover, taxes, labor, more taxes and we know at once why he is smarter.

Right away we get on our feet and head for the shop, figuring maybe we can trade jobs with someone in an unguarded moment, because we used to be a pretty fair mechanic in our day. But before we can locate anyone, in drives a friend of ours who wants a motor tun-up so his car will be perfectly adjusted for this extra cold weather (which is something you should do, too) so naturally we stop to talk. He tells us he's been trying to figure out what goes on in school these days, ever since he asked his kindergarten (a g e d daughter, "What did you learn in school today?" And she says, "Nothing! We were too busy."

And that did it! Even the customers are brighter than we are. We are going to get a cup of hot coffee and head for home but before we go we must ask you to remember that your car will give you no better service than the service you give it. Why not have our experts put it in perfect condition for perfect service the rest of the winter. You'll be glad you did.

Oh, yeah, there almost was a murder out our way the other day. A fellow told his wife her stockings were wrinkled. It took him a while to get them out.

Yours,
BOB KETTLER
