Church organizations and women's groups were asked by Mrs. George V. McLaughlin to organize groups to receive the Red Cross Home Nursing training course.

Beauty Routine Starts With Old-Fashioned Cleanliness

Jean Simmons, whose hands are important to her both as an actress and as a woman, bleaches them with lemon before applying rich cream for smoothing them.

OLD-FASHIONED beauty tricks are often the best, according to Jean Simmons, well-known British film actress, who strives toward natural loveliness rather than sophisticated glamour.

Although her beauty routines are simple ones, she doesn't overlook the importance of regular care. She stresses that the basis of good looks is—first of all—cleanness. Hair should be frequently washed, shining, well-brushed. Faces should be thoroughly cleansed before make-up is applied.

It's important, she continues, to concern yourself with beauty as a whole. Hands are too often neglected, she feels.

SHE suggests this routine for keeping them always ready for the spotlight of unexpected attention. Slice a lemon in two and rub the cut half over your hands. This will aid in bleaching, and in giving your hands the milky look toward which current fashion is trending.

To make certain they are smooth as well as white, she advises the use of a rich hand cream. Use this regularly before retiring, and supplement its good work during the day with a non-sticky hand lotion. Apply the lotion after drying, to restore the oils that are lost when your hands are dipped in water.

SIMPLE STEPS SPEED MEAL PREPARATION

School days are rush days with little time left for meal preparation. Ruth Ingalls, of the foods and nutrition department of Michigan State College's school of home economics, has a few suggestions to help busy housewives in the job of getting three meals a day.

First, she advises planning ahead of menus, marketing and last minute preparation.

Second keep your menus simple. Fewer fancy dishes mean less dish washing time, too.

Third, do some early preparation of main dishes or desserts, if possible.

Fourth, don't attempt new recipes when the time is limited.

Menus and marketing lists should be planned so that weekly trips to the grocery or market will be sufficient. Menus should be planned so that complicated dishes will be used on the least-busy days.

Some things may be made ahead of time and stored. Now that a wide variety of foods may be frozen, early preparation is easy.

Last minute preparation must be carefully planned. Use large salads and omit dessert, she advises.

Package mixes help to cut time. Plan to prepare the food requiring the longest cooking time first. Anything which should be served cold (like certain puddings) must be prepared first.

Good plans must be used to insure a nutritious meal as well as a quick meal, Miss Ingalls concludes.

CHILDREN CAN BE TAUGHT TO ENJOY MEALTIME, MSC SAYS

Mothers who say, "I can't get my child to eat," may find help on some tips given by home economists at Michigan State College.

Children should want to eat, they point out, since eating is a natural process. If a small child refuses food, it may be because he has satisfied his hunger by sucking his thumb between meals. He may not feel well, his eating time may be irregular, he may be too tired, or he may have too little exercise.

The home economists suggest training the child's appetite by serving meals at regular times, other methods are to serve small amounts of food, to offer only one new food at a time with a food that he does like, and to make meal time a happy occasion.

If other members of the family eat a good example by eating the food and bodies need, small children will often follow suit. When a child refuses a food, parents should not make a fuss of it, but eat as though they expect the child to eat the foods he is served.

Severe punishment for failure to eat may make matters even worse, for the child may develop a dread of mealtime.

Treat mealtime as a pleasant time of family gathering and the child will soon realize that he should eat when the others do, the home economists say.

U-M DOCTOR GIVES ADVICE ON INJURIES TO SPINAL CORD

Proper care in transporting persons with suspected spinal injuries to the hospital is imperative, a University of Michigan doctor emphasized.

If the spinal cord has not been destroyed at the time of injury, mishandling or jostling about will often cause marked damage making future recovery unlikely, Dr. Richard C. Schneider, assistant professor of surgery, explained.

A spinal cord injury should be suspected when a person involved in an accident has suffered either a snapping movement or direct blow to the neck or back and then complains of pain over the spine, numbness, weakness, or paralysis of the legs or arms, he said.

The major cause of spinal injury were listed by Dr. Schneider as due to: 1. automobile accidents; 2. swimmers diving into shallow water; 3. home accidents such as falling downstairs or from a ladder or off a roof; and 4. farm accidents such as runaway tractors, balky threshing machines or unstable hay mows.

Here is how Dr. Schneider advises moving a person suspected of spinal cord injury. Three or four persons standing on the same side of the injured person should gently raise him without bending or twisting the spine and maintaining the body on a level plane at all times. The person should then be placed carefully on a firm stretcher, board, or even a door and a rolled blanket should be placed under the curve of the neck and the hollow of the back.
